1000 Tanks Locked in Battle Near Metz; Japanese Land More Troops on Leyte

7 Destroyers Sunk as Foe Rebuilds His Ormoc Force

16 Enemy Planes Smashed; Yanks Advance 5 Miles In Ground War

MacArthur's Headquarters, Philippines (Saturday), Nov. 11 (AP).—Japanese defenders of Leyte landed heavy reinforcements from four 5000-ton cargo ships at Ormoc last night, but lost three of the transports and seven of the 15 accompanying destroyers in the effort.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur's communique gave no estimate of the number of enemy troops landed; but a headquarters spokesman said the number—which, judging from the size of ships, could have been between 5000 and 10,000 men—was in addition to the 35,000 men which the enemy was estimated to have landed up to yesterday's announcement.

The headquarters spokesman estimated the new reinforcements gave the Japanese as many men on Leyte now as they had when the American assault on the island began. The 40,000 to 45,000 Japanese are faced by a known four American divisions, whose strength has never been disclosed.

Sunk in Vicious Battle

Appearance of the Japanese convoy touched off a vicious 24-hour aerial battle in which American dive and level bombers sank the enemy ships while fighters downed 16 of the defending enemy fighters and probably destroyed five more in the sky-filling dogfights above the bombers. Four American bombers and four fighters were lost.

However, the American aircraft apparently failed to arrive soon enough to prevent landing of the majority of the troops and material carried by the enemy transports. The spokesman admitted that a majority of both were probably landed safely.

The American aerial attack, featuring P-38 fighters and shore-based Mitchell bombers, was made through determined Japanese aerial protection and extremely heavy antiaircraft fire during the period from 4 p. m., one day, until 4 p. m. the next.

American aircraft were credited with six of the sunken Japanese destroyers and a PT boat sank the seventh.

Yanks Gain 5 Miles

In the ground fighting, an advance of up to 5 miles through mountains south and west of Carigara was credited by the communique to the dismounted First Cavalry Division. The Twenty-fourth Infantry Division, which has borne the brunt of recent fighting along the mountainous road from Pinamopoan southward toward the last desperate Japanese counterattacks. The communique said enemy losses in these counterattacks were "severe."

On the hilly front near Patok; the 96th Division ran into heavy opposition. Its rate of advance was not specified. The Seventh Division, last reported moving north on Ormoc after crossing Leyte from east to west far south of the main battle lines, was still unmentioned, as for the past several days.

Apparently, the advance of the First Cavalry Division was a flanking move to support the 24th's painful drive down the Ormoc road. Japanese positions there on the hilltops have given the infantrymen vicious resistance all the way south from Pinamopoan to the U-shaped bend in the road at the village of Limon, last inhabited place mentioned in the communiques. Today's announcement did not place the First Cavalry advance accurately.

Major Bong Bags 34th Jap Plane

With Fifth Air Force, Leyte (Saturday), Nov. 11 (INS).—Maj. Richard Bong of Poplar, Wis., America's top-ranking ace airman, bagged his thirty-fourth Jap plane yesterday. The reticent hero declared that his thirty-fourth victim gave him no fight.

Bong's thirty-fourth Jap plane was an Oscar fighter, one of the enemy planes protecting the Jap convoy which landed enemy reinforcements at Ormoc.

Armistice Day Rites to Be Led By Roosevelt

President Roosevelt will lead the Nation's wartime observance of the twenty-sixth anniversary of Armistice Day this morning when, with Mrs. Roosevelt, he will make his annual pilgrimage to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery.

Throughout the city veterans of two wars and citizens will commemorate the day when the order to "cease fire" brought bloodshed to an end a generation ago.

The business of war today, however, will go on as Government workers remain at their desks. Department and retail stores will be open, although the legal holiday will be observed by banks and some chain grocery stores.

Most Courts to Be in Recess

The District Building and all courts except the criminal division of Municipal Court will be closed.

The Army and Navy Union, oldest veterans' organization in the country, has been assigned first place among the groups laying wreaths on the Unknown Soldier's Tomb. Following them will be representatives of the Blue Star Mothers of America, whose stated membership is 500,000 mothers of men and women in this war. The Union delegation also will lay wreaths on the tombs of the Unknown Soldiers of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars, in Ar-

Will Never Forget His 'Homecoming,' President Says

By James E. Chinn

A rain-dampened mass of more than 330,000 men, women and children roared a greeting to President Roosevelt yesterday upon his triumphal return to Washington—a celebration he described as "a very wonderful welcome home; a welcome home I shall always remember."

"The Champ's" homecoming demonstration, far different in character but equally as impressive and significant as the one the people of the Nation gave him at the polls Tuesday, served to show the doubting Axis powers that politics in a democracy do not destroy national unity, either in war or in peace.

Waves and Smiles

From Union Station to the White House, the President rode in an open car, the collar of a raincoat turned up snugly about his neck, responding frequently to cheers and applause with a broad smile and a friendly wave of his hand. Seated beside him, sharing the welcome, were the new Vice President-elect, Senator Harry S. Truman (D., Mo.), and the man he will succeed on January 20, Vice President Henry A. Wallace. Little Johnny Boettiger, the President's grandson, rode proudly in the front seat of the presidential car, beside the driver.

Umbrella-topped crowds, among them servicemen and women, and thousands of Federal and District employes, and school children given time off to take part in the celebration, lined the route of the President Roosevelt came back to Washington and a rousing welcome yesterday and went to work on tough international problems at the desk where he'll do business four more years.

Amid the customary rumors that some of its members may be out of jobs, he called in his cabinet for its first post-election meeting.

Byrnes' Post Seen Going To Vinson

Husbands Expected To Be Named Chief Of New Surplus Property Board

By Ben W. Gilbert

Appointment of Economic Stabilization Director Fred M. Vinson to the over-all post of director of war mobilization and reconversion established by recently approved legislation seemed assured last night, while Director Sam H. Husbands of Defense Plant Corporation loomed as the probable choice for chairman of the newly created Surplus Property Board.

Informed quarters also predicted that Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs, would be designated director of retraining and reemployment under the reconversion legislation.

The jobs must all be submitted to the Senate for confirmation. The present congressional recess will end November 14.

Other Retirements Likely

In another development on the job front, it was reported that Judge Marvin Jones would resign as food administrator shortly after Victory in Europe Day to return to the Court of Claims.

Chairman Paul V. McNutt of the War Manpower Commission also was reported preparing to retire when VE-Day makes retention of over-all manpower controls unnecessary. It was not clear, however, whether he planned to remain in Government service or accept one of a number of pending offers from private industry. McNutt is also Federal Security Administrator.

As OWMR director, Vinson is also expected to retain authority over economic stabilization, making unnecessary appointment of a successor. The OWMR job is now held on an interim basis by James F. Byrnes, pending confirmation of a successor. Byrnes, who left the Supreme Court to serve as director of economic stabilization and then as director of war mobilization under presidential executive orders, has indicated that he would not accept permanent appointment to the OWMR job, created by statute for a two-year term.

Naming of Vinson to the OWMR job would signal the adoption of a more cautious attitude on the relaxation of production controls affecting cost of living items. Vinson is known to have asked the War Production Board to review its reconversion program to retain controls on cost of living items until all danger of a price inflation has disappeared.

The Surplus Property Board was

Minn. Sweep Beats Gale

Former Street Cleaner Amazed By His Election to Congress

Minneapolis, Nov. 10 (U.P.).—William J. Gallagher, former street sweeper, whose victory over Representative Richard P. Gale, Republican, was Minnesota's major political upset, was not surprised today—he was dumbfounded.

"This is what I've been aiming at for years," he said, puttingp a little coal in the living-room heater. "But I never thought I had a chance when Gale had that 8000-vote lead."

The lead Gallagher spoke of was a tabulating error made in counting Third Distrtict returns in Hennepin County. When all precincts were counted, Gale had 69,155 votes to Gallagher's 71,322.

Gallagher won nomination and election as a member of Minnesota's Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party—a fusion of the old Farmer Labor Party and the Democrats.

Gallagher, a small, partially bald 69-year-old man and a $25.48-a-month city penisoner, conducted a modest campaign.

"I just did a little janitoring out at Shedd-Brown Manufacturing Co.," he explained. "I managed to raise about $200, and my campaign didn't cost quite that much."

Although the congressional post will be the first political office Gallagher ever has held, it is not because he has not tried.

"I've been politically minded ever since I got out of high school back in the 90s," he said. "I worked for a while as an editorial proofreader for the National Single-Taxer"—that was a magazine published in Minnesota then, and I'm still a Henry George Man. I'm a single taxer."

New V-2 Stratosphere Rockets Now Bombard British Isles

Less Feared Than Buzz-Bombs, Though Blast Carries 10 Miles

By Henry B. Jameson

London, Nov. 10 (AP).—The new V-2 rockets fall like shooting stars and although they are nothing compared to the buzz bombs as a terror weapon, they make a whale of a bang that can be head for 10 miles.

One man who lived through such an explosion less than 50 yards away said "I didn't hear any noise whatever before the explosion—then I thought it was the end of the world."

Another man, describing the same incident, said a "terrific explosion" was preceded by a noise like thunder. Others say the rockets looked like great balls of fire, and a few even claim to have been close enough to call them "great black arrows."

The first one I saw at night in the country seemed to me to be the moon exploding. There was a brilliant flash, followed by a jolting bang.

Double Explosions Reported

Many persons have reported hearing double explosions, one at the time of the flash in the sky and a second, presumably when the business end of the rocket landed.

Reassured by Prime Minister Churchill's statement today that casualties and damage have not been heavy, Britons are going on about their business without any sign of alarm.

While censorship regulations still forbid publication of detailed damage reports, the "flying telegraph poles" so far have been too inaccurate to be of much military value.

Many narrow escapes have been disclosed, however, since the secret of "vergeltungswaffen" No. 2 was launched.

In one incident a Mrs. French,

Churchill Confirms Claims Broadcast By German Radio

London, Nov. 10 (AP).—Prime Minister Churchill confirmed today that England is under attack by the German long-range V-2 rocket, announcing that it flies through the stratosphere up to eight of between 60 and 70 miles and then plummets to earth with a ton of explosives traveling at a speed faster than sound.

Casualties and damage, he told a sober Commons, "have so far not been heavy," although the attack has been under way "for the last few weeks." Churchill said "a number" of the new rockets had landed at widely scattered points in England.

Churchill pointed out that the speed of the V-2—estimated by other sources at between 700 and 1000 miles an hour—outstripped sound which travels at some 743 miles an hour. Therefore there was no way of giving sufficient public warning, but he said that "there is, however, no need to exaggerate the danger."

Antwerp Also Target, Foe Says

"The scale and effect of these attacks have not hitherto been significant," he added.

The German radio said tonight that the V-2 was also being fired against Paris and the harbor installations at Antwerp, great Belgian port through which the Allied command plans to supply the Western Front armies.

The V-2 is described as so far too inaccurate to be of much military value. It penetrates deeper than the V-1, but for this very reason causes less blast damage.

Churchill declared:

"The use of this weapon is another attempt by the enemy to attack the morale of our civil population in the vain hope that he

One Shot Was Enough

Old-Time Army Sharpshooter Bags First Nazi—at 900 Yards

By Henry T. Gorrell

With First Army in Germany, Nov. 10 (U.P.).—Capt. George Newbert of Baltimore, a Regular Army man with many years of experience in sharpshooting tournaments, today took time off from his job of escorting prisoners to the rear and fired a rifle with malice aforethought for the first time.

His record today: One bullet, one German.

Before he squeezed the trigger and knocked off a major at 900 yards, Newbert was thoroughly irritated—"browned off," he called it. As commander of a military police escort company, his duties were to pick up the prisoners of war and take them to Army prison cages in the rear.

"Why, once, in Hawaii, I got 28 bull's-eyes for a keg of beer," he told his old buddies in the front lines. "On Thanksgiving Day in 1934 I got a turkey right in the neck at 100 yards, shootin' standin' up with one hand on the rifle." It was a quiet day and his friends listened.

He went on sadly:

"But after all these y ars on rifle teams it looked like I ain't gonna shoot anybody—not much chance for shooting on my job."

Someone brought out a Springfield rifle with a telescopic sight—a sharpshooter's weapon. A lieutenant told Newbert he knew of an infantry observation post overlooking a German pillbox across the way.

Newbert and the lieutenant stretched on the snow-covered ground beneath bushes at the ob-

BULLETIN

London, Nov. 10 (INS).—The Nazi Transocean Agency said tonight that the first armored battle provoked by the United States Third Army's new offensive had broken out today east of Delme, southeast of Metz, with about 1000 American and German tanks engaged.

"So far no details are available about the battle," said a Transocean dispatch, as broadcast from Berlin.

The agency's correspondent, Gunther Weber, said the Germans were "contesting every yard of ground with the utmost tenacity," and that "both sides are constantly throwing in new reserves" between the Rhine-Marne Canal and Chateau Salins.

Gains Are Scored

Paris, Nov. 10 (AP).—The Third Army's winter offensive spread today to nearly every section of a 75-mile front and the fortress of Metz, threatened with envelopment, echoed to the din of battles 5 miles to the north and 9 miles to the south.

(A front dispatch said the Sixth Armored Division, the second tank division to join at least six infantry divisions in the drive, pushed forward 5 miles and was now beyond Buchy, 10 miles southeast of Metz.)

The Germans struck back at two places north of Metz during the morning, the first counterattacks since the big push began three days ago, but by midafternoon the doughboys had forged on an average of 2 to 3 miles, as much as 7 miles beyond the jump-off positions.

Most of Front Ablaze

The front was ablaze from north to south with the exception of the strongly fortified German bulge around fort-girdled Metz, an arc with an average radius of 7 miles and now threatened with encirclement by Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton's drive.

Censorship did not permit disclosure until now that this was a major offensive, an operation which was speared by veterans of the breakthrough in France. These veterans today were barely 30 miles from the Siegfried Line around Saarbrucken.

Saarbrucken's rail yards, feeding the Lorraine Front, were under aerial attack in an attempt to seal off the battle zone—as in France—and the Germans seemed unable to bring up enough reserves to stay the offensive.

The Ninetieth Division, repulsing a counterattack led by only two tanks at Koenigsmacher, 19 miles north of Metz, deepened their bridgehead to three miles across the Moselle River, which would place them within 10 miles of the Saar frontier.

Assault Broken up

The second counterattack rolled up in the long-quiet Meizieres-Les-Metz sector, five miles north of Metz, but the Ninety-fifth Division broke up the assault and drove on east toward the Moselle for sizeable gains.

(A front dispatch said that on this part of the front, advanced elements now were within four and a half miles from Metz.)

To the south of Metz, the Germans appeared to be falling back, depending on road blocks and minefields to slow the Americans while withdrawing the bulk of their artillery to lines farther back.

Nazis at Budapest Cut Off by Reds

British Take Forli; Yanks Also Gain

Rome, Nov. 10 (AP).—British troops of the Eighth Army, widening their grasp on the southeastern edge of the Po Plain, captured the old Italian fortress town of Forli on the Rimini-Bologna Highway and loosened up German positions in the hills south and southwest of the city, the Allied command announced today.

Forli, a community of 65,000 population 38 miles southeast of Bologna, was captured after the Fifth Corps, under Lieut. Gen. C. F. Keightley had made it so hot for the Germans on the west side of the Forli airfield southeast of the city that they were forced to pull back after many days of stubborn defiance.

The Fifth Corps then thrust swiftly up the Rimini-Bologna highway and captured the Forli barracks, a little more than a mile east of the town, and the railway station on the north side. Other British units moved up the airfield road into the city.

Tonight the Allies were pressing on against Germans aligned at a new obstacle—the Montone River, which flows northwest from Forli.

The battleline on the extreme eastern flank of the Italian front now runs almost due north and south, with the Allies still held on the coastal road about 5 miles below Ravenna and others prying the Germans from their hill positions southwest of the Rimini-Bologna Road.

Capture of Forli put the Eighth Army well along this highway to a point just 9 miles from Faenza to the northwest. Every mile gained along the highway increases the danger to German troops still fighting in the mountains to the south.

American Negro troops on the western coastal sector of the Fifth Army front continued to move forward and occupied the villages of Azzano, Terrinca and Levigliani amid towering peaks east of Massa.

On other parts of the Fifth Army front there were no changes.

Budapest-Miskolc Rail Link to East Slovakia Is Severed

London, Nov. 10—(AP)—Russion troops drove a wedge between the German defenders of Budapest and eastern Slovakia today by cutting the Budapest-Miskolc railway in the area of Mezokovesd, 65 miles northeast of the Hungarian capital, Moscow announced tonight.

Pushing 20 miles west beyond the Tisza River and expanding their front to a length of 42 miles, the Russans also imperilled the rear of the German and Hungarian forces trying to hold other Red Army troops menacing Budapest on the south and southeast.

The communique announced the capture of 4100 more Hungarians and Germans Wednesday and Thursday, boosting to approximately 150,000 the number of enemy troops killed or captured since Oct. 6, when the invasion of Hungary began.

Reds Urge Hungarians to Desert

Red Army planes dropped leaflets carrying an appeal by Col. Gen. Janos Voeroes, former Hungarian chief of staff who recently surrendered voluntarily to the Russians, for the Hungarians to desert the Germans and join the Red Army.

Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky's second Ukraine Army units fanned out along the Budapest-Miskolc railway, driving both toward Budapest and toward the southern Czechoslovakian border in the Miskolc direction.

Among the towns seized at the top of the front beyond the middle Tisza River and Hejopapi, only 13 miles southeast of Miskolc, Hungary's fifth city.

At the southern end of the front the Russians, in a seven-mile advance west of Kiskore on the Tisza, seized Pely, 54 miles due east of Budapest, and were within 13 miles of a junction with other Soviet forces pushing up from the south past Fallen Szolnok.

Rains Hamper Operations

Steady and heavy rains hampered the operations in Hungary and elsewhere along the front, but Russian units still engaged in clearing the Budapest-Cegled railway captured Pilis, 22 miles southeast of the capital.

The German Transocean commentator, Lieut. Col. Alfred von Olberg, said there was "lively activity" behind the Russian front, indicating that a big Soviet winter offensive was impending in the north.

The appeal to the Hungarians by Voeroes was broadcast by Moscow as well as being dropped by plane over the front.

Voeroes was chief of staff until mid-October, when Admiral Nicholas Horthy, Hungarian regent, was ousted by the Germans after publicly announcing he was seeking an armistice. Horthy was arrested October 16 by the German Gestapo, Voeroes told his countrymen. He said he was authorized to issue orders in Horthy's name.

In Yugoslavia, Spitfires of the Allied Balkan Air Force, taking off from Greece, pounded German columns retreating through southern Serbia.

Marshal Tito's headquarters announced Yugoslav advances toward Krivolak and Gradsko, on the Vardar River just below Vesles.

Louvigny, 9 miles south of Metz, and pressed on to the northeast.

Chateau-Salins Falls

To the southeast the important German road center of Chateau-Salins, 25 miles from Metz, fell.

Elements of the 26th division were closing on Hampont, 3 miles east of Chateau-Salins on the Saarebourg-Nancy railway. The village of Coutures, a mile west, also was overrun.

A half-dozen miles northwest the Eightieth Division stormed and captured Delme Ridge, a 1200-foot height commanding territory for 10 miles around.

Delme itself, a town 18 miles southeast of Metz, last was reported still in German hands, but tanks of the Fourth Armored Division rumbling on beyond it were less than 5 miles from a vital feeder railroad from Metzt to Sarrebourg after gains of some 3 miles.

Inside Germany, an indecisive struggle raged on in rain and sleet in the Hurtgen Forest area southeast of Aachen.

Here the doughboys of the U. S. First Army made a 600-yard advance just southwest of the town of Hurtgen and held it in the face of counterblows, but a similar advance to the south later was lost.

Cleaning Out Pillboxes

West of Schmidt, 15 miles southeast of Aachen, American troops moved 300 yards across a snowy battlefield, slowly cleaning out pillboxes.

Positions remained unchanged at Vossenack, 2 miles to the northwest.

Only artillery duels were reported on the western Holland front, where the British and Germans exchanged shots across the Maas River.

A dispatch from the Dutch island of Walcheren, to the west of this front, said the last 300 shivering defenders, cold and hungry, were brought out by rowboat, ending all resistance there.)

In the long-besieged port of Dunkerque, artillery fire was reported alonog the 25-mile perimeter of the German defenses, and rocket-firing planes atacked enemy gun positions.

On the U. S. Seventh Army front, 15 miles south of the southern edge of the Third Army battle zone, the Germans brought up reinforcements to forward positions, apparently fearing the offensive would spread to that quarter.

He has two brothers in the service, Wilbur Sheehi, in the Army, stationed in Dallas, and Pfc. Samuel Sheehi, USA Medical Corps, stationed in England.

Missing in Pacific Area

Much has been reported missing in action in the Pacific are,a according to word received by his parents from the Navy Department. Enlisting in December, 1942, Much received his training at Bainbridge, Md., and New London, Conn., and was assigned to submarine duty. He attended the Fairfax High School, and has a brother, Harry W. Much, stationed at Camp Shelby, Miss.

Blank is a prisoner in Germanheld territory after previously being listed as missing on August 28, according to his parents.

Blank, who holds the Air Medal with two Oak Leaf Clusters, is pilot of a B-17. He was on his forty-eighth mission when his plane caught fire over Yugoslavia and the crew bailed out at 22,000 feet. Three of the crew members were aided by Tito's Partisans and later returned to Italy.

Blank was graduated from Western High School and from West Point in 1943. He went overseas last March.

servation post and, while the lieutenant watched through his field glasses, the captain fingered the Springfield's trigger and manipulated the sight.

"I see two Germans outside the pillbox," reported the lieutenant. "They look like enlisted men."

Wainted for an Officer

"Let's wait for an officer," Newbert replied, fingering the sights. "How far you reckon that pillbox is?"

"Nine hundred yards," estimated the lieutenant.

"I make it 850," countered the captain.

A door of the pillbox opened and watchers at the observation post saw an imposing soldier come outside. He gesticulated in an imperious manner and insignia showed on his collar.

"Looks like a major," whispered the lieutenant.

Newbert peered through the sights, then squezed the trigger. The German officer clutched his right thigh, then fell backward. The two enlisted men rushed up to catch him.

Newbert grimaced.

"Nine hundred yards on that sight instead of 850," he muttered, "and I'd o' got hi min the beddy."

RWLB Approves $15 Yule Bonus

Richmond, Va., Nov. 10. (AP).—An employer may give an employe a $25 bonus this Christmas whether or not he has had a bonus plan in effect without obtaining permission of the War Labor Board, Chairman M. T. Van Hecke, of the Fourth Regional WLB, said today.

He stated, however, that if an employer has been giving bonuses to employes he may not add $25.

Van Hecke said changes in WLB policy will not permit Regional Boards to approve applications for new or increased bonus payment plans unless the amount of the bonus, or the percentage plan by which the amount is determined, conforms to the practice prevailing in the industry in the area involved prior to October, 1942, when wage stabilization began.

Gallagher was married in 1936, and his wife is now a chocolate dipper at the Lydia Darrah Candy Co.

"She hasn't been thinking much of going to Washington," Gallagher said. "She didn't even leave her job when that tabulation error was found and I was in. She stayed on until 5 o'clock."

In Congress, Gallagred said, he would back President Roosevelt's policies ("I've always been a Woodrow Wilson man, myself"), but the first thing he expects to do is decorate his modest home, the lower rooms of a frame building.

"She sure needs it, doesn't she?" he asked.

greated by law to replace the Surplus War Property Administration headed by Will L. Clayton, former Undersecretary of Commerce. Clayton, who branded the new law "unworkable," has refused to serve on the board. Restrictions on the disposition of surplus property were placed in the law after some farm and labor groups protested a protested a proposal drafted by Clayton.

Husbands was said to be the choice of Byrnes and Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones for the top surplus job.

Also prominently considered for posts on the 3-man Surplus Board are James Shepherd, Los Angeles attorney and Lieut. Col. Joseph P. Woodlock, executive assistant to Clayton, Woodlock, a former executive of the Crucible Steel Corp. of America, is expected to return to a civilian status shortly.

Batt Boom Collapses

The boom of William L. Batt, vxice chairman of the War Production Board, for one of the $12,000-a-year surplus post appeared to have collapsed, J. B. Hutson, president of the Commodity Credit Corp., received the backing of Vinson for one of the three posts, but is also believed to be out of the running.

Efforts to block Husband's appointment may be made by farm and labor groups, particularly the Farmers Union and the CIO. The two groups did not like Clayton and regard Husbands as equally unsatisfactory. They are disappointed that they were not consulted about any of the appointments.

In addition, organized labor was expected to insist that a labor man be appointed to one of the three posts on the board to make sure that the large Government-owned war plants are disposed in a way to promote maximum employment.

At his press conference yesterday, President Roosevelt stated that he was ready to name two of the three members of the board and was waiting to hear from a third name before announcing the board's make-up.

Generally Expected

General Hines has been serving as director of retraining and reemployment under an executive order. This executive order office was recreated by legislation. His reappointment has been generally expected.

Other members of the reconversion high command is Robert H. Hinckley, director of contract settlement, who has already received a statutory appointment.

Military Value Of V-2 Rocket Is Belittled

By George Connery

Germany's new V-2 rocket bombs, landing on Eugland at speeds up to 1000 miles per hour, are hopelessly inaccurate and inefficient, informed Washington sources said last night, but they admitted that once launched there is no known way to knock them out of the sky.

"They are perfectly useless in a military sense in their present state of development," one spokesman said.

Defense techniques applied to the V-1 bomb are ineffective with the V-2, because of its faster-than-sound speed and the tremendous altitude of its course. British fighter planes were able to pounce on the slower V-1's while still over the channel and blast away at them for long distances.

Many Robots Shot Down

Even before Germany lost its V-1 launching beds in France, so many of the robots were being shot down that the weapon was rapidly decreasing in significance.

But there is no existing plane that can climb high enough in the stratosphere to get at the long, thin V-2's, reported to weigh around 15 tons and carry a ton of explosives. Nor can flak cause them any appreciable trouble.

Going after them in flight, one air observer said, would be "just the same as trying to shoot down a shell."

There seemed to be agreement that the only way to stop them is to destroy their launching cradles, which Germany has boasted will never be detected. There was a division of expert opinion as to their range, some guessing it at no more than 200 miles, but others conceding it might be much greater.

Also Hitting Antwerp

Although Britain continued to hold a news blackout on specific damage from V-2 and location of the damage, it is likely the new missile's inaccuracy and high speed combine to bring under sporadic attack parts of England that escaped the more accurate, shorter-range V-1.

According to the German radio, V-2's also are striking the great Belgian port of Antwerp, which is expected to receive the bulk of supplies for the Allied drive into the Reich. If the German reports are true, informed people in Washington said, the new bomb may prove a dangerous military weapon. As its range is decreased, they expected that its accuracy and explosive load would be increased.

With all its advantages, the tendency was to consider it a glorified "Buck Rogers" creation, whose morale effect on the jittery German public could justify its continued use.

Since the last war the British and American air forces have experimented with pilotless robot bombs, and this work is being continued. However, both decided that in its present state the robot couldn't match the bomber as a weapon for concentrated, accurate destruction.

employe of a bakery which was demolished, was having tea with the proprietor and his wife after the shop had closed. "Something seemed to fall on top of us," said the proprietor. "Mrs. French was killed instantly, but my wife and I, sitting on the other side of the table, were only badly cut."

An elderly woman walking along a sidewalk when a rocket fell nearby saw "a vivid red flash"—and the next moment found herself sitting in the middle of the street, hardly scratched.

Houses, schools, hospitals churches, public houses and other buildings have been among those destroyed or damaged in rocket attacks.

Length Estimated up to 50 Feet

One "ghost bomb" that fell in the garden of a farmhouse dug a deep crater but failed to break a single window. This bears out the Prime Minister's statement that V-2 is more penetrating than the fly-bomb but causes far less blast damage.

Witnesses who have seen them fall estimate their length from 30 to 50 feet and from two to four feet in diameter, with a warhead about the same size as the flying bomb.

"I saw a black cloud of smoke and then what appeared to be a very bright star traveling fast," said George Matthews, who saw his neighbor's house demolished. "Then, later, there was an orange and red explosion which appeared to have two distinct reports."

Frank Turner said it was almost a minute from the time he saw "something in the sky that looked like a red football" until he was rocked on his heels by an explosion.

Many pieces of exploded rockets have been recovered in scattered sections of the country.

Some parts of mechanism, from which experts may be able to piece together a composite picture of the rocket, also have been found.

may, somehow, by this means stave off the defeat which faces him in the field."

At its estimated speed the missile would require but a few minutes to leave its launching base, rise 60 or 70 miles into space, and drop haphazardly upon some unsuspecting area.

The Germans broadcast over every home network, "It is true V-2 by itself could never decide the war in Germany's favor, but we never made such an assertion."

Churchill disclosed that some of the rockets had been fired from the Dutch island of Walcheren, which is now in Allied hands.

"Other areas from which rockets have or can be fired against this country will doubtless be overrun by our forces in due course," he said.

The Prime Minister added a note of warning that this might not end the attacks, for he said there was no certainty that their range might not be increased by reducing the weight of the warhead or by other mehtods.

The people of Britain have known for some time that scattered areas have been under desultory bombardment by rockets, and V-2 became just another Nazi nuisance to the majority. Many of the early explosions were explained as "gas main explosions."

Blast Declared Less Effective

"The rocket contains approximately the same quantity of high explosives as the flying bomb," said Churchill. "However, it is designed to penetrate rather deeper before explosion. This results in somewhat heavier damage in the immediate vicinity above the crater, with rather less blast effect around it."

Churchill's disclosure came two days after the German high command first mentioned the bombardment of London by V-2.

He described the German radio's "highly colored accounts of attacks on this country" as statements reflecting what the German government would have the German people believe in "the desperate need to afford them some ncouragement."

V-2 has been described by neutral sources as a "flying telegraph pole" without ordinary bomb ns and weighing about 15 tons at the takeoff. Some German commentaries hae said it could be used to bombard the United States as well as England. It has been said that launching sites were built in the Hartz Mountains, 450 miles from London, although the present ranges are reported only about 300 miles.

procession. Hundreds of others shouted their greetings from windows of buildings along Pennsylvania ave.

Downpour Holds Off

Although Mr. Roosevelt's special train arrived from Hyde Park, N. Y., shortly before 8:30 a. m., it was 38 minutes later before the President and the official reception committee emerged from the Washington Terminal yards in a caravan of automobiles. Almost simultaneously, a dark ominous looking cloud came out of the northwest, but the downpour it threatened obligingly held off until prearranged ceremonies at the Columbus memorial fountain in front of Union Station had been completed.

It was there that the procession halted to allow Commissioner John Russell Young to extend to the President, Washington's official homecoming welcome.

I am happy and proud to welcome you back to the old city," said the Commissioner.

Clear Back to Cleveland

Mr. Roosevelt recalled as The Washington Post's WINX and other radio stations picked up his words, that his association with Washington and that of "Russ" Young's, went back to the first administration of Grover Cleveland, but said the Washington of today is "different from the Washington I first came to."

The President also expressed special thanks to Government workers "for all they are doing to win the war," and added: "I do not overlook all the people here in Washington who make it possible for us to work and live here."

The welcome home ceremonies Mr. Roosevelt declared made him "very happy," but he pointed out, laughingly, that while Washington is now his home he did not expect to make it a "permanent residence" for the rest of his life.

Suggested by The Post

Washington prepared hurriedly for the celebration at the suggestion of The Washington Post which sponsored similar demonstrations for Mr. Roosevelt after the preceding two presidential elections. Flags were attached to every lamppost along the route of the procession which followed Delaware ave. from Union Station to Constitution ave., thence to Pennsylvania ave., to the White House. Many buildings along the route were decorated with bunting, and displayed "Welcome Home" signs. One of the largest, on The Washington Post Building, read:

"Welcome, Mr. President for Victory and Peace."

Seven hundred Metropolitan policemen, 300 firemen, auxiliary police, Boy Scouts and Washington high school cadets patrolled the route of the procession, but their duties were minimized by the orderliness of the huge crowd that pushed against the taut ropes and cables from Union Station to the White House.

Nine Bands Participate

Nine bands—military, naval and marine, police and high school cadet—played stirring march music along the route of the procession. Two of them were stationed around the Union Station Plaza and were the first to signal the approach of the President with "Hail to the Chief."

The Marine Corps' unique bagpipe band from Quantico, which made its debut in Washington's Navy Day parade, played in front of The Washington Post Building.

Long before the street lights were turned off, small groups of men and women collected around Union Station. By 9 a. m., Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer estimated the number outside the station and lining the curbs to Delaware and Constitution aves. had reached 25,000. He said they were being held in check by 8000 feet of rope.

Welcoming Banners

Scores of banners greeted the President's eyes as his car rolled out of the terminal yards. "You've won here, let's win over there," read one. "In '44, we need you more" was the slogan on another. On a third was this: "You're back and we're back of you."

A cavalcade of policemen, mounted on motorcycles, escorted the presidential procession to the Columbus fountain. Closely behind followed a car in which were Commissioner Young, Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kutz, Police Superintendent Edward J. Kelly and Representative Jennings Randolph, chairman of the House District Committee.

Two cars overflowing with heavily armed Secret Service agents, were trailed by other vehicles, in which were Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of staff to the President, and Secretary of Treasury Henry Morgenthau jr. Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins rode alone in a five-seated sedan.

his envoy to Moscow.

The dates with diplomats at the end of the day pointed up again the prospects of a second Roosevelt-Churchill-Stalin meeting to talk over final plans for crushing Germany and partial plans for keeping the world at peace later on.

No Conference News Yet

Mr. Roosevelt had no news on such a conference. That was what he told reporters soon after he returned to the capital and a tumultuous reception by a quarter million Washingtonians standing in a rain.

But he said the big three do want to meet when they can arrange it. Nothing has been worked out yet, he said, and for security reasons he wasn't going to announce it when arrangements were completed.

London conjectured that the President might come there, pick up Prime Minister Churchill, and move on to Paris and then to the Middle East and an appointment with the Soviet Premier.

The Chief Executive was back in the White House for the first time since he set out a week ago to wind up his campaign and await the outcome at his home at Hyde Park, N. Y.

Popular Vote at 45,504,419

A few more votes culled from States getting counts in belatedly raised the popular vote total late today to 45,504,419. Roosevelt had 24,296,158, Thomas E. Dewey 21,208,269, with 8187 precincts out of 130,789 still missing.

In high good humor for his first press-radio conference since the fourth term victory, the President was prodded into proving that as a political prognosticator he isn't strictly accurate.

Reminded that he had made a guess on the electoral vote, he began fishing around in a desk drawer for a slip of yellow paper.

And this is what it showed: 335 for the President, 196 for Dewey.

That compared with the indicated count of 432 to 99.

As for the 25 cents—a whole quarter—which he had wagered on the election, Mr. Roosevelt said he got scared and called it off. New York State says it's against the law for anybody to vote who has bet on the balloting.

Question on 1948 Horrid

Paul Ward of the Baltimore Sun screwed up his courage and inquired:

"May I be the first to ask you, Mr. President, whether you are going to run in 1948?"

That, the Chief Executive retorted, was a horrid question. The same one was asked in 1940 and in 1936, he said. And there he let it rest.

Secretary of State Hull, ill in Naval Hospital, was missing from the cabinet meeting. Looking as if he had stood up well himself under the strain of the campaign, the Chief Executive said he had had a report this morning that Hull was getting along very well.

Hull is one of the cabinet members mentioned in some of the gossip about possible cabinet changes, but associates said they thought he wanted to keep his portfolio as long as he can and that Mr. Roosevelt would let him.

President Accorded 'Main St.' Welcome

By Roosevelt

Permanent Residence Disclaimed

President Roosevelt's response to Washington's celebration of his return home from a fourth-term victory, delivered extemporaneously into battery of radio microphones on the Union Station plaza, follows:

"This is a very wonderful welcome home that you have given me on this rather rainy morning—a welcome that I shall always remember. And when I say welcome home I hope that some of the scribes in the papers won't intimate that I expect to make Washington my permanent residence for the rest of my life.

"All these years—8 in the Navy Department, 12 in the White House—and 4 to come—will have a great effect on Washington. The city is very different from the Washington that I first came to in the first Administration of President Cleveland. I go back—Russ Young and I go back, I think, to Cleveland's first Administration because we are the same age.

"So I want to tell you how glad I am to be here and say one word to you—especially the Government workers—for all that you are doing to win this war. And when I say especially Government workers I don't overlook all the other people in the city who make it possible for them to come here and to live and to work here.

"So, thanks very much."

First Citizen Is Acclaimed As Capital's Own

The cosmopolitan flavor of the Nation's Capital yesterday was dissolved in a real hometown welcome that would have done justice to any Main Street, USA, as Washington's First Citizen came back home.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, winner and still champion, looked every inch the victor as he started toward the White House for his most triumphant postelection return from Hyde Park, N. Y.—and obviously the District's natives and "duration guests" who crowded about Union Station's plaza regarded the President as their own hero instead of a New York State resident.

It was typical Roosevelt weather that greeted the Chief Executive, and he took it with typical Roosevelt grace. Less protected from the angry elements than many of those who came to greet him, the President paid no hed to the low-hanging gray clouds that swept overhead in molasses-like masses just as the party left Union Station.

Has Homeowin Touc h

Radi omen swrame dabout the prsideential car sa i thalted on th eplaza ot permti Mr Roosevelt ot speak briefly in response to the welcome of Commissioner J. Russell Young. That, too, had a hometown touch as the Prseident paid tribute to Government workers for their part in the war and added: "I hope it won't be intimated that I expect to make Washington my permanent residence for the rest of my life."

Crowds around the plaza could not hear his words, and in fact could not even glimpse him during the stop because of the radio and newspaper representatives pressing against Secret Service men. But they cheere danyway, as the big, open touring car turned toward the Capitol and then to Pennsylvania ave.

Apparently printed on the spur of the moment, but none the less effective, signs dotted the plaza, acclaiming: "Welcome, F. D. R." "Ballots Supported Your Bullets—Now for Victory," "You' :e Done It Again, Mr. President, Now Let's Beat Japan," and other welcome-home slogans.

Dewey Not Forgotten

"Gee, he looks wonderful," was the general comment, spoken by many watchers in slightly awed tones. The infectious Roosevelt smile even inspired one enthusiast to call loudly across the plaza at the station: "Phooey on Dewey!" but it was in the spirit of gaiety, not malice, that persons nearby joined in the laughter.

Government workers were given time off to attend the homecoming, as were District school children, but crowded buses en route to Federal offices indicated that many were bound for their desks regardless.

And at the Astorial Flower Shop, 823 12th st. nw., Proprietors Pete Karedes and George Karamibalis outdid even the celebration they accorded the surrender of Italy last year as they gave away 35,000 flowers with a cheery: "Have a Rose-velt!" Italy's capitulation brought forth only 20,000 roses from the same source.

Present Future 'Mates' Ride With Chief

By Adele Bernstein

Cocking a skeptical eye at the skies thundering a welcome, President Roosevelt emerged from his train in Union Station promptly at 9 o'clock yesterday morning, sat for a minute or two taking stock of applauding newsmen and Cabinet and staff members, then settled back in his big Packard 12 for the triumphal ride back to the White House.

Tanned and clear-eyed, the President, as one rain-drenched woman in his party observed, looked "much fresher this early in the morning than any of us youngsters."

Vice President Wallace and Vice President-elect Truman were at the foot of the train steps, where they had stood patiently side by side for about 15 minutes under a huge black umbrella held by a Secret Service man.

Invitation From Chief

Finally, the President sent word down by his aide, asking that the two "ride with me in the front car." The only other ocupant, beside the driver in the front seat, was his five-year-old grandson, Johnny Boettiger, who had squirmed impatiently for 20 minutes before the procession got away.

The Metropolitan Police Band played lustily—four flourishes and ruffles, and "Hail to the Chief"—as the President left his train, and the rain began to come down in earnest.

Once in his car, the Chief agreed that the weather might prove too much for his light grey salt-and-pepper suit and dotted "Eleanor blue" tie. So a fawn-colored rain coat was wrapped about him and his wavy-brimmed grey "campaign" hat set on his head—which he at once turned up off his face.

Orders Top Folded Back

Black clouds notwithstanding, he first ordered the canvas top folded back for a better look all around.

Nearby, standing or waiting in official cars, were Commissioner John Russell Young, Secretary Morgenthau, General Hershey, Secretary Stimson, who climbed aboard the presidential train as soon as it arrived, at 8:23 a. m., from Hyde Park, and former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman.

Maj. Gen. ("Pa") Edwin M. Watson, the President's military aide, acted as official greeter at the entrance to the car as members of the Cabinet, Congress and Army and Navy officials trooped inside to welcome their chief.

Following the President's car into the crowd-packed station plaza rode Mrs. Roosevelt in a black tailored suit and blue-feathered black hat, with her daughter, Mrs. John Boettiger and Admiral William D. Leahy.

Other Notables Follow

Behind them in the procession were Secretary Perkins, Secretary Wickard, Senator Guffey, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Lieut. Gen. A. A. Vandegrift, Acting Secretary of State Stettinius, Economic Stabilization Director Vinson, War Manpower Commissioner McNutt and other members of the welcoming party.

Among the first down the train steps was Buzzie Boettiger's black Labrador retriever, "Ensign," who belied his name by refusing to come out into the wet until young Johnnie vigorously yanked him down.

Almost mistaken for the President because of the similarity of their costumes—both wore tan raincosts and somewhat battered-looking headgear — Commissioner Young, chairman of the District arrangements committee, rode ahead in the first car.

Committee Personnel

Members of Commissioner Young's citizens welcoming committee included: Charles Stofberg, special assistant to the general chairman; Col. Joseph D. Arthur, jr., assistant engineer commissioner; Lieut. Col. Leonce Legendre, executive officer of the Regional Civilian Defense; Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, Melvin Hildreth, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Russell Balderson and Arthur Clarendon Smith, all of the Democratic Committee; Joseph C. McGarraghy of the Republican Committee; Philip Murray and Jim Carey of the CIO; Edward Colladay, Republican National Committeeman; Lee Pennington, American Legion; John Locher, Central Labor Union; William Green, James E. Colliflower of the Board of Trade; Carter Barron of the V-E Day Committee; Alexander F. Edgewater Beach Zoning Proposed Annapolis, Md., Nov. 10 (AP).—The Anne Arundel County Commissioners propose to establish a restricted residential and farming area at Edgewater Beach, South River, near Annapolis.

The action, first taken by the commissioners under zoning authority given them by the last session of the General Assembly, followed a petition several weeks ago by residents of the waterfront community opposing a plan to build a marine railway and erect a business property adjacent to a residential section at Edgewater Beach.

The commissioners named a committee to draft zoning regulations.

The opening of a three-day series of religious exercises for the "Forty Hours' Devotion" at St. Mary's Catholic Church, 312 South Royal st., Alexandria, starting at 12:10 p. m. Sunday with high mass, was announced by the pastor, the Very Rev. Edward L. Stephens, V. F., dean of the parishes of northern Virginia.

For the observance, dating back to 1527, when it was first introduced in Milan, Italy, and extended to other countries by the Jesuits, a solemn exposition of the Blessed Sacrament is held over 40 hours, honoring the period during which the body of Christ rested in the tomb, Father Stephens said. He cited the devotion as a means of spiritual preparation for Christmas.

At mass in Alexandria, the Rev. Eugene Maroney of the Holy Ghost Fathers in Washington will be the celebrant; the Rev. Joseph L. Leitch, assistant pastor of St. Mary's, the deacon; the Rev. Stephen Quinn of the Trinitarian Order, subdeacon, and the Rev. Julius Cilinski of St. Mary's Seminary in Baltimore, Md., master of ceremonies.

On Sunday and Monday evenings at 8 o'clock sermons will be preached by the Rev. Vernon J. Bowers of the Diocesan Missionary Fathers at Richmond, Va. Low mass will be celebrated at 6:30 and 7:30 Monday and Tuesday mornings, with high mass each day at 8 o'clock.

The devotion will officially close Tuesday evening at 8, when the Litany of the Saints will be chanted by the visiting clergy.

400 Children Need Yule Aid In Montgomery

Approximately 400 children under the supervision of the Montgomery County Welfare Board will need toys, food or clothing this Christmas, the holiday exchange committee of the Montgomery County Social Welfare Council, announced yesterday.

In its appeal for help to conduct the annual holiday exchange the committee pointed out the dreariness of poor homes missed by lack of Christmas gifts from the observance of public health nurses and the Board of Education attendance officer who visit such places.

Each year, the Montgomery County social agencies send to holiday exchange a list of opportunities to help unfortunate ones at Christmas. The exchange passes these on to clubs, schools, churches and interested individuals. The filled requests come back to the exchange's office for distribution to needy people.

Persons interested in spreading cheer at holiday time are urged to call Mrs. Edwina Ricketts, Rockville 360.

Wagner's Campaign Costliest

By the Associated Press

On the basis of incomplete reports available to the Senate, the successful campaign of Senator Wagner (D., N. Y.) was the most expensive.

Wagner reported no personal expense but the Wagner-for-Senator Club listed $38,001.15 as its outlay up to October 27.

Expense items covered oyster roasts in Maryland, lawn parties in New Jersey and $2500 worth of transportation for voters in Oklahoma. Most money, as usual, was listed for advertising of various kinds, or for radio time.

Red Cross Cites 16-Time Donor At Alexandria

A 16-time blood donor, Carl Newman, Civil Aeronautics Authority Guard at the Washington National Airport, was among the outstanding donors cited by Mrs. John Warlick, chairman of the Alexandria Red Cross blood donor service, in her monthly report to the chapter board of directors.

Mrs. Warlick also paid special recognition to two discharged veterans from the Army and Navy whose lives were saved by blood plasma and who are now repaying the Red Cross with regular donations.

From the Army is F. B. Ochsenreiter, an employe of the Gulf Oil Co. at the airport who was wounded on Mindanao in the Philippines and received 8 pints of plasma. He was discharged in January of 1943 and on November 1 of this year made his second donation of blood toward replacing the entire amount.

The former Navy man is R. P. Hanscom of RFD No. 2, Alexandria, employe of Transcontinental & Western Airlines, who was injured in a plane crash in the European theater and received 5 pints of plasma. He made his first donation November 1 at the airport.

Mrs. Warlick also told the board that the Alexandria blood donor service has conducted special recruiting meetings at the airport during the last two weeks attended by recruiters from the various airlines, the postoffice, air terminal service, Weather Bureau, Army flight service, Gulf Oil Corp. and resident engineers.

Sikes Resigns Congress Seat

Representative Robert L. F. Sikes (D., Fla.) has resigned his seat in Congress to become an Army major, assigned to "a special mission for the War Department."

Sikes, 38-year-old member of the House Military Committee, was re-elected Tuesday. His office said yesterday the resignation did not apply to the new two-year term in the 79th Congress convening in January, thus indicating he may return to the House later.

Mrs. Rena Washington Dies in Charles Town

Charles Town, W. Va., Nov. 10 (AP).—Mrs. Rena Porterfield Washington, 80, died at her home here Thursday night. The widow of George Washington, three-times Mayor of Charles Town, she was the last surviving member of the family of the late Colonel and Mrs. George A. Porterfield.

She is survived by one son, the Rev. Father Richard B. Washington, of Hot Springs, Va., and several nieces and nephews.

Slow Start Set For Congress' Final Session

The last session of the dying Seventy-eighth Congress, with many a "lame-duck" election casualty, will convent at the Capitol at high noon Tuesday, but won't get down to business for another 10 days.

Democratic leaders, many of them not yet back from the hustings, will take up unfinished business with the President at a White House conference tentatively scheduled for Tuesday morning.

Allowing for tardy arrivals, leaders plan very little work during the first week. The Senate will take a three-day recess almost as soon as it convenes, and recess again on Thursday until the following week.

From there on in it will take lively stepping to complete action on pending "must" measures before this Congress dies at the year's end. These range from extension of the statute of limitations in the Pearl Harbor cases of Admiral Kimmel and General Short to extension of the Second War Powers Act.

Also awaiting action on the eSnate calendar are House-passed rivers and harbor and flood control authorizations. Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), has served notice he will move for another "freeze" of the social security payroll tax. Unless frozen, these will automatically double to 2 per cent each on the employers and employes January 1.

Jaycees Again Ask Alexandria To Save Paper

The Alexandria Junior Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring its second two-day scrap paper drive of the fall season today and tomorrow from 1 to 5 p. m. The drive in August netted over 41,000 pounds, and the club is confident that, through its experience in making collections and the assistance of Alexandria householders, the figure can be topped this weekend.

Residents are being asked by the drive chairman, John W. Monroe, jr., to pile their scrap paper bundles on the curbs in front of their homes. The canvass of the city will be made by Jaycees accompanying 15 Army trucks from Fort Belvoir and five trucks donated for the project by Alexandria business firms.

Monroe emphasized that in saving paper for use in the war effort, residents are indirectly helping to relieve shortages in other materials such as tin and steel which have been supplanted by cardboard for containers. Assisting Monroe is a committee including the Jaycees president, Charles D. Pulman.

Residents who may have been missed by the collectors during the two afternoons may call for trucks by notifying two of the members' wives, Mrs. Lester McMenamin at Temple 4438, and Mrs. Larry Clements at Temple 4323, who will be at their homes to receive calls.

New Virginia Airline Applies for Charter

Richmond, Va., Nov. 10 (AP).—The Atlantic-Western Airlines, Inc., one of Virginia's newest airlines, today announced a charter service operating out of Richmond for Washington, New York, Atlanta "or almost anywhere else."

The corporation has applied to the State Corporation Commission for authority to operate on regular passenger schedules within Virginia, covering travel between Danville, Richmond, Lynchburg and Roanoke. A hearing on the application—the first under the Virginia Air Carriers' Act—is scheduled for January 7.

Clarke County Farmers Vote Today on Soil Plan

Berryville, Va., Nov. 10 (Spl.).—Farmers of Clarke County will ballot at four places Saturday afternoon to decide whether or not they will be included in the Lord Fairfax soil conservation district. Voting places are at Boyce, White Post and Swimley Station in addition to the courthouse here. Any person holding title to 3 or more acres of land is eligible to vote.

Election Probe Set in Indiana, Likely in Ohio

Charges of fraud in the Indiana and Ohio elections have prompted a Department of Justice investigation in Indiana, with a similar one in Ohio likely to follow, the Washington Post learned exclusively last night.

Democratic leaders assert that if the charges are proved correct, Ohio, which went Republican by the skin of its teeth, may be tipped over into the Roosevelt column.

Officially reported elections of Senator Robert A. Taft (R., O.) and Homer E. Capehart (R., Ind.) are at stake as well as the Prseidential and House votes, Democratic leaders said.

MESA May Be Involved

The Democrats are asking two Senate committees to aid the investigations in both states.

In Ohio, party leaders believe, the investigation may even include the MESA (Mechanics Educational Society of America) strike which was not settled until two days before the elections.

"Before we get through we should be able to show who started that MESA strike and why," one Democratic leader asserted.

The strike involving some 15,000 war workers started in Toledo, Ohio, October 24 and spread to Detroit. Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson branded the strike as "treasonable," and on November 4 President Roosevelt ordered the Army to take over eight of the struck plants.

Democrats Make Charges

Charges in Indiana were made by Fred F. Bays, chairman of the State Democratic Committee, and in Ohio by Democratic leaders.

James P. McGranery, assistant to the Attorney General, last night confirmed reports that the department had entered the Indiana inquiry, and added:

"If there is any evidence of fraud in Ohio, we will certainly make an investigation there, too."

Specific Indiana charges involved the Eleventh District where Louis Ludlow, Democratic incumbent, seesawed back and forth for days. Once declared elected over Judson L. Stark, Indianapolis Republican, Ludlow began to lose rapidly in further counts.

He was officially counted defeated, Democratic leaders said, but the result had not been announced.

When the investigation got underway, a recount was made and Ludlow, who has been in Congress 16 years, forged ahead yesterday afternoon by 2600 votes.

Armistice Day

We know now poignantly enough that the anniversary we observe today was nothing more than what its name implies—an armistice, an interlude in the long war for human freedom. There will be many among us whose reverence today will be not only for that Unknown Soldier enshrined at Arlington but for some soldier known and loved and lost in the renewal of this war.

It may be that some of those who are bereft will find solace in the last letter written to his parents by Pvt. Sidney Robbins, age 21, of New York City, killed in action. The significance of this Armistice Day is better expressed in his words than in any at our command.

> This is my last letter to you. I am keeping it in my pocket, and if I should be killed, I hope somebody will mail it to you.
> I used to say that I wanted to do something to help make the world better.
> Now I have the chance. If I die, at least I will know that I died to make the world a better place to live in.
> I'll die, not as a hero, but as an ordinary young man who did all he could to help overcome the forces of evil.
> I'm only worried about how sad you would be if I get killed, and I hope you will also be proud that your son gave his life for the greatest cause in the world—that men might be free.
> God bless you both.
> I'll always love you.
> Your devoted son, SIDNEY.

It is not given to many men to know why they die. To nearly all of us, of whatever age, death comes inopportunely. Perhaps it is only to those who lay down their lives of their own volition, with a sense of purpose, that death can bring the feeling of fulfillment. Yet this fulfillment can be realized only by us, the living—only by a consecration to the purpose of those who died which will transmute the day of armistice into a day of enduring peace.

Election Kibitzers

Now that the ballots have been counted, and President Roosevelt has again been declared the winner, our fellow members of the United Nations are making no bones about their relief over the outcome. From Paris to Chungking a chorus of congratulation is coming in. The British had held themselves back in order to avoid giving any impression that they or their government were in any way trying to influence the election in the United States. That feeling wasn't shared by the editors of Izvestia or by Wladimir d'Ormesson of the Paris Figaro, among other commentators, European and Latin American. However, any irritation we might feel on that score is scarcely valid in view of the fact that Americans have never exercised any particular restraint in expressing their views on foreign governments and statesmen.

Few even well-informed foreigners could understand why, in the midst of a war, the United States was holding an election. Nor could they understand why, in view of the fact that they like and admire Mr. Roosevelt, all Americans should not feel the same way about him, and why any one should want to replace him by somebody who, instead of 12 years as Chief Executive, has had no experience in that office. Perhaps now they will feel that the vast referendum was well worthwhile. Aside from the demonstration which it gave of the vigor of our democratic process, it must have been a tocsin for all the peoples who are fighting in the army of freedom.

Hitler's Silence

Why was Hitler silent on the anniversary this week of the Munich beer hall putsch of 1923? Was it, as the Nazi radio declared, because the new mobilization decree made it impossible to hold party meetings? The explanation is plausible, but hardly convincing. Even if circumstances prevented the kind of gatherings which Hitler has annually addressed in commemoration of his first bid for power, there was nothing to stop him from going on the radio.

Was Hitler's silence due to fear of being haunted by the memory of past speeches he has made on such occasions, the memory of shattered hopes and broken promises? Any speech by Hitler at this time would have had to be delivered against a background of mounting disaster and growing misery. However, Hitler has never hesitated to pile promises on promises. And during recent years he has used these annual conclaves of his old comrades as the occasion to argue that just as the Nazi Party rose from defeat to victory, so Germany will overcome her present difficulties and emerge triumphant.

A third explanation, and one which must undoubtedly have occurred to many Germans, is that Hitler is physically incapable of making a speech, and not because he suffers from what General Dittmar calls the general claustrophobia.

Except for his brief appearance before the German radio a few hours before the attempt on his life last July, he has been conspicuously silent. His mobilization edict was read in his name by Himmler. In this connection it is significant that no pictures of the Fuehrer have appeared in the German press of late, and that he did not make a personal appearance on the occasion of Marshal Rommel's funeral.

Is it possible, then, that Hitler did not come through unscathed from the attempt on his life? That possibility has been advanced in the neutral press of Europe, and it may very well be the explanation for Hitler's silence. But, whether he is dead, dying or wounded, the Nazi hierarchy have no intention of proclaiming any such fact to the world. Certainly they will keep quiet till their control over the Reich is so sure that they can retain their grip regardless of what happens to Hitler.

War Criminals

There is a rather admirable clarity and simplicity in the Russian attitude toward war criminals. The Russians, who have had at least as much experience with Nazi savagery as any people on earth, do not intend to let the individual Nazis responsible for the savagery go unpunished. Their experience, not unnaturally, has made them exceedingly impatient with any "legalistic" approach to the treatment of such persons. The impatience has recently found expression in an article published by War and the Working Class and reprinted over here in the latest issue of the Soviet Embassy Information Bulletin.

The article administers a violent verbal spanking to Sir Cecil Hurst, chairman of the United Nations Commission for the Investigation of War Crimes. "In the majestic temple of justice which he erects," it says, "he provides extensive bomb-shelters, dugouts and trenches into which the indicted criminals may creep to escape the hand of justice." The charge is not altogether without warrant. Sir Cecil's eminent commission has moved with a deliberateness, not to say hesitation, which suggests pathetic confusion as to its purposes. It is not yet quite sure, apparently, that Hitler, Himmler, Goering and Goebbels can be properly catalogued as criminals, although it definitely has them under suspicion. In the year since its establishment, it is said to have found only 350 criminals liable for punishment.

Some of the experts on the commission, it is reported from London, insist upon regarding Hitler as a chief of state, his aides as members of a government and his Gestapo and SS as state police—all of them, therefore, free from criminality on the ground that they acted as the duly constituted official authorities of their country. The article in War and the Working Class quotes Sir Cecil as having remarked in reference to Hitler and Mussolini that "The United Nations might decide to bring them to trial or to deal with them as Napoleon was dealt with." It is somewhat difficult to blame the Russians for disquietude about this. They think that Hitler and Mussolini differ from Napoleon in several significant respects, and that Saint Helena, or even Elba, is rather too good for either of them.

They are troubled, too, by an observation of Sir Cecil's that the commission must decide before handing over a criminal if he is "guilty of only one crime." Somewhat acidly, the article makes this inquiry: "If some Nazi miscreants only once threw children into a fire or asphyxiated civilians in murder wagons, does the demand that they should be handed over lose its validity?" Moreover, the article complains, Sir Cecil "deems it necessary to exclude from the category of war criminals all quislings and persons guilty of wholesale extermination of their citizens on racial, political or religious grounds."

War and the Working Class calls this "the strategy of 'mercy'" and describes it as "only one of the links in the campaign for a lenient peace launched by the Hitlerites and certain circles which support them. Accordingly, a plea for mercy to the butchers is a plea for a compromise peace, a plea to leave in Germany the hotbed of future wars and future atrocities." The strategy, if it should be so called, would surely frustrate the clear declaration made by Roosevelt, Stalin and Churchill that the guilty will be punished. Of course, as the Soviet article itself points out, "a careful investigation and a well-founded verdict are essential if justice is really to triumph over evil." But justice can scarcely be administered in accordance with a criminal code which never envisaged crimes so heinous as those which the Nazi leaders have perpetrated. There are basic laws of humanity which these people have violated. And it is on the basis of these that they must be judged.

Cotton To Rayon

The recently passed Reconversion Act raised the parity loan rate for cotton to 95 per cent of parity while the Commodity Credit Corporation, acting under a provision of the Stabilization Extension Act of 1944, has offered to purchase the 1944 cotton crop at 100 per cent of parity. Apparently the farm bloc in Congress takes for granted that the South will benefit from these price boosting policies, despite their adverse effect upon the cotton export trade.

That view is not shared, however, by far-sighted critics who ask what will become of the South's cotton textile industry after the war if raw cotton prices continue to be maintained far above the levels that would prevail in a free market. In its current Monthly Review the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta boldly tackles this question and reaches some arresting conclusions. It starts with the thesis that the long-run improvement of Southern agriculture calls for larger farms, more diversified agriculture, and expanding industries to absorb farm families displaced by agricultural reforms. Heretofore, the cotton textile industry has provided an important outlet for surplus farm labor, and it has also been the greatest single outlet for the South's cotton crop.

As a result of the war, cotton consumption is far above normal, having averaged more than 10 million bales annually since Pearl Harbor, as compared with a peacetime figure of between 6 and 7 million bales. If postwar consumption should return to prewar levels, the problem of surplus cotton and of excess industrial capacity would evidently be extremely urgent. "The central problem," says the Atlanta Federal Reserve Bank, "is the same for cotton growers and for cotton manufacturers: Either demand must be increased until it is in equilibrium with the capacity to produce, or production must be reduced until it is commensurate with the probable long-run demand." There does not seem to be the slightest chance of keeping the South's textile industry fully employed after the war if the prices of raw cotton continue to be maintained at artificially high levels. The Reserve Bank study points out that high prices for raw cotton, which constitutes about half the total cost of the finished product, necessitate high prices for cotton goods. When the excessive demands of wartime cease, these high prices will restrict consumption of cotton goods and at the same time increase the competitive strength of industries manufacturing substitute textile products. Consequently the cotton textile industry will be confronted by cutthroat competition from within and without.

A good many Southern cotton mills are said to be planning to escape the worst by changing to the production of rayon. One manufacturer is reported to have said, "I don't know of a concern in the whole industry that is not thinking of making such a shift as soon as it can get out from under its present war contracts." Another states: "We are perfectly open-minded as to the fibers we process. We are not wedded to cotton. We will use whatever fibers are most profitable." In other words, mills in a position to turn to other types of cloth production have an answer to the dilemma posed by the Government cotton-price policy; but it is one that would leave the cotton farmer in desperate straits. For it would entail a sharp shrinkage in the peacetime domestic demand for cotton which has already been priced out of export markets, except with the aid of subsidies.

Clearly we are headed for a major postwar crisis in the cotton textile industry if the policy of raising raw cotton prices above market levels is continued without maintaining price and production controls over both cotton goods and competing textile fabrics. In the end we shall be forced to choose between a comprehensive system of government controls that would sweep away free enterprise or abandonment of the attempt to keep raw cotton prices above world competitive levels to the detriment of Southern industry and Southern agriculture.

Another BP

A London dispatch states that Sir William Beveridge, author of a comprehensive "cradle to the grave" social insurance plan, has produced another plan calling for state spending on a scale sufficient to insure full employment and full utilization of national resources. The government would also be empowered to regulate investments and to purchase essential goods for later resale, while the prices and output of stable commodities would be subject to international control. A critical appraisal, or even understanding, of what is evidently an elaborate and intricate program is, of course, impossible on the basis of a sketchy summary. But the London announcement provides evidence—if any more is needed—to show how deeply the British are interested in proposals involving a high degree of government management of formerly private economic activities.

Sir William is an able and persuasive thinker who cannot be dismissed as a visionary social reformer to whom practical people pay no attention. On the contrary, the social security plans recently announced by the Churchill government were based largely on earlier Beveridge proposals. It is also worth noting that Sir William was returned to Parliament in October as a Liberal by an overwhelming majority vote, though the total number of votes cast was limited. It is especially significant of the trend of British opinion that a public man sponsoring programs that we should consider extreme forms of state socialism is not even labeled as a left wing radical by the British. This profound difference in emphasis is likely to prove a stumbling block in the way of the kind of international accords on economic matters that we are hoping to reach. For our announced desire to encourage postwar return to the system of free enterprise is not going to fit into control proposals of the Beveridge type.

The Big Wind

The presence of the marine bagpipers outside our window yesterday morning, while the President was being welcomed back to the White House, reminded us that we have been taken seriously to task for our recent pleasantries about the marine bagpipers. Other letters appear this morning. We feel wilted. We regret that those pleasantries have been taken amiss by our marine friends. We had hoped we had made it evident that our remarks on this matter were not meant to be taken seriously and that we were merely attempting to enliven by the contrast of a few amiable frivolties the grim topic of war and the depressing topic of preelection politics.

New Congress

New York.

A STUDY of the congressional election returns shows the victory for world organization to be clear and unmistakable. In every part of the country isolationists were defeated, but particularly in the Middle West and in Illinois, where the issue was sharply drawn.

The triumph of Mrs. Emily Taft Douglas over Stephen A. Day for Representative-at-Large from Illinois is in some ways more significant than the defeat of Ham Fish in New York. Mrs. Douglas, a newcomer to politics, put the emphasis throughout her campaign on Day's black isolationism and his connections with George Sylvester Viereck, the Nazi agent. Her majority over Day was close to 225,000, considerably larger than President Roosevelt's margin of victory in the State.

The reelection of Senator Scott W. Lucas over the Chicago Tribune's candidate, Richard J. Lyons, was further evidence of the emphatic rejection of the narrow America First doctrine. Thanks to the sweep in Illinois, Senator C. Wayland "Curly" Brooks, who was not up for reelection, will be the sole voice of the head-in-the-sand conviction.

Everywhere you look in the new Congress the signs are favorable for American participation in a world organization. Gerald Nye of North Dakota, one of the most conspicuous and persistent isolationists, will be replaced by Gov. John Moses of that State, who is reported to be a man of high capacity.

ON THE REPUBLICAN side in the Senate, at least two of the newcomers, Wayne Morse of Oregon and Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts, have both been strong advocates of international cooperation. They will strengthen the stand of Republicans like Warren Austin of Vermont, who has set a courageous example of cooperation for his party.

It is around such leaders that the Republican Party can rally in search of a new progressive direction. With embarrassments like Nye, Dye and Fish removed, there is no reason why the party of opposition should not show the way instead of merely following.

The Rupublicans have within their own party a man who has pioneered in this field. That is Minnesota's former Governor, Lieut. Comdr. Harold E. Stassen. Stassen never quibbled, never hesitated. He has been on one side of this question all along, and that was the right side: the side of historic inevitability.

When I was in Minnesota briefly during the campaign, Stassen's friends were fearful that the defection of Senator Ball had damaged or destroyed Stassen's political future. Ball was a young newspaperman when Stassen appointed him to the Senate. Far from hurting Stassen, it seems to me that Ball's independent stand was proof of the former Governor's ability to pick a man of integrity and moral stamina to whom principle meant more than party. Stassen, returning from the war with a broad experience behind him, should prove a rallying point for progressive Republicans.

ON THE DEMOCRATIC side, too, there are conspicuous gains. Two of the worst obstructionists, Robert Reynolds of North Carolina and "Cotton Ed" Smith of South Carolina, stepped out in the face of almost certain defeat in the primaries. The rebuke that Texas gave him, including booing and hissing which made it impossible for him to speak on several platforms, should leave Pappy O'Daniel somewhat chastened. Unfortunately, he does not come up for reelection until 1948.

Younger men like William Fulbright of Arkansas, elected to the Senate after two years in the House in which he distinguished himself, should help to lead the way toward Senate approval of a world security plan that is not shot full of emasculating reservations. Connecticut replaced Republican Senator Danaher with Brien McMahon largely, it appears on the isolationist issue.

The omens are good. In the light of the clear choice of the people in every section of the country, anything like a sitdown strike by those unable to forgive the President his reelection to a fourth term would be intolerable. From the President must come tolerant, wise leadership, for now he has a mandate and he has a Congress elected on his mandate.

Campaign Factors

In view of the election results it would appear that the Political Action Committee of the CIO and like-minded groups will continue as a factor to be reckoned with in future campaigns.

It is recalled that the CIO-PAC "primer" for political action, which states in simple English the viewpoint of all hardened and hard-shelled politicians, caused something of a furore when its contents were revealed. Mr. Dewey denounced the "cynical tone" of this booklet but, curiously, there was a dearth of specific newspaper editorial comment or criticism. Indeed, I detected a tendency to shy away from any discussion of the basic tactics of the CIO-PAC to attain its objectives. ARMY MAN.

Laying A Ghost

By Barnet Nover

A Consistent Policy Now Possible

IN TURNING their backs on 1920, as they did so completely and unequivocally in the balloting of last Tuesday, the American voters also laid a ghost that has been troubling the world for almost a quarter of a century and never more so than during the last few years.

So far as outward indications went, there seemed to be no question after 1940 and particularly after Pearl Harbor, that the United States had abandoned isolationism and was prepared to cooperate with the other nations of the world in establishing and maintaining an international organization capable of enforcing peace.

There was the Atlantic Charter. There was the Moscow Declaration. There were the Fulbright and Connally Resolutions, their principal provision reiterated in the platforms of both the Republican and Democratic parties. There was Dumbarton Oaks.

BUT THESE hopeful developments, impressive in their totality, were not enough to lay the ghost of 1920.

Englishmen, Frenchmen, Russians, Chinese and others remembered that before Franklin D. Roosevelt there was Woodrow Wilson, before the Atlantic Charter the 14 Points and before Dumbarton Oaks the League Covenant. The fear persisted that history would repeat itself; that after again making a mighty contribution to victory and assuming the leadership in the organization of peace, the United States would once more retreat to isolation.

THIS FEAR haunted the makers of foreign policy everywhere. Every plan they made that was contingent on the full participation of the United States in world affairs had to be accompanied by an alternative plan based on the possibility that the United States would do nothing of the kind.

Thus foreign policy had to be conducted on two levels and was so conducted as is most clearly brought out in the case of Russia. Willing and eager to cooperate in a postwar security organization, Russia has also been engaged in securing strategic frontiers. That line of action was motivated in part, at least, by the fear that the present coalition would dissolve after the war and Russia would have to look to herself entirely for her security.

THE REELECTION of President Roosevelt and what is fully as important, the election of a Congress far more internationalist than any we have previously had, should resolve that difficult dilemma.

There is now every assurance that President Roosevelt can commit the United States to a policy of participation without fear that he will be repudiated, as Woodrow Wilson was repudiated, by a hostile Senate.

This circumstance means a great increase not only in President Roosevelt's world prestige but also in his authority. When he now goes to confer with Marshal Stalin and Prime Minister Churchill, as he is likely to do very soon, his voice will carry greater weight than ever before.

IT IS PROBABLY more than a coincidence that the latest speech made by Marshal Stalin was the most encouraging he has ever made, so far as indicating the degree to which Moscow is willing to go in postwar cooperation.

That speech came on the eve of the twenty-seventh anniversary of the November revolution. It also came on the eve of the American presidential election. At that time the ballots had yet to be cast and counted. But we can safely assume that Stalin was not unaware, when he spoke, of what Messrs Gallup, Roper and Crossley were predicting.

The Russian leader was not only warm in his praise of what the Anglo-American allies had done in the west, but was also forthright in his support of Dumbarton Oaks. He admitted that some differences among the members of the United Nations continued to exist. But he discounted their importance.

"One should not be surprised," he said, "because differences exist, but because there are so few of them, and that they are as a rule solved almost every time after the united and coordinated action of the three great powers. It is not a question of the differences, but that the differences should not be solved against the unity of the three great powers, and that in the final count they are solved in the directions of the interests of complete unity."

If this means anything at all it means that at the next meeting of the "Big Three" Russia will not take an uncompromising position on matters in which her viewpoint differs from the viewpoints of Great Britain and the United States, providing Britain and America also refrain from taking an uncompromising position. In this stand by Russia there is the promise of real harmony among the three powers.

The Big Wind

Your inane ridicule of the music of the Great Highland war pipes indicates your ignorance. As a matter of fact the world owes the Scottish pipes a great debt of gratitude for the music it has given us, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," "The Campbells Are Coming," "The Last Rose of Summer" and many more that are known to everyone. The fact that composers have pirated liberally the Scottish and Irish Pipe music is sincere tribute.

For your information: The Irish war pipes are, as a practical matter, the same as the Scottish. The Irish however also have the "Mean" pipes that have a bellows that is operated by the right elbow while the bag is under the left elbow. These pipes play about two octaves with sharp and flats similar to a piano. They also have the characteristic drones and in addition have what is known as regulators that compare with the bass on a piano accordion. One has to sit down to play them.

The Highland war pipes do not play the same scale as the piano. There is, of course, no reason why they should.

Of course the real objection to your article is not that I mind your not liking pipe music, but that you should ridicule it. Personally I don't like jive. There is one thing, though, in which pipe music is dissimilar to jive and that is that the pipes, or rather the pipers, are skilled enough to keep time and to play the time correctly as the author intended.

F. W. TURNBULL.

Vienna, Va., Oct. 30.

We don't know what you know about buzz bombs and this war, but all you know about Marines and bagpipes is what you read, or hear from people that don't know, according to our deduction on the article, "The Big Wind," that appeared in The Post on October 30.

For the information of the writer of the article, the Marine pipe band was organized in Londonderry, Northern Ireland, about February 1, 1943, to make good the boast of our commandant, an American naval captain at the time.

The following May 13—three months later—the band made its first public appearance in a parade commemorating the anniversary of the First Provincial Marines in Ireland. The "gentlemen of the press," men who were reared on pipe music, were very generous. Several articles of praise admitted that the Marines had "plenty on the ball." In August or September, 1943, we received an invitation to compete in a major pipe contest to be held in Dromara, Northern Ireland. Bands from all over the British Isles participated, and, oddly enough, the "horror experienced" gyrenes came through with third place! We haven't the vaguest idea of who F. M. Sergeant Carlton is. It couldn't be F. M. Sergeant Hyland, or could it? We are also acquainted with "whuskey," but what on earth is "higgins"—could the writer be referring to "guinness?"

[No, we wrote haggis.—Ed.]

As far as training for this "grim mission," it may enlighten the writer to know that the 27 members of the band trained as every other man in the battalion trained: guard duty, field problems, obstacle courses, weapons classes, field days, training films, inspection and guard mount daily, among other duties. The only opportunity to rehearse and practice would be every other day during their liberty time. They sacrificed their own time to prove that a Marine can do anything.

During the "Wings for Victory" week, a British bond drive, our pipe band was instrumental in raising more money than any other one organization in Ireland!

And we think it's an awful pity that your "friend" would take advantage of your ignorance.

It's quite obvious that the late Jerome K. Jerome knew very little about the Scotch pipe, otherwise he never would have made such a ridiculous statement! And speaking of ridiculous lingo, I quote from "The Big Wind," "and it's almost impossible to believe that even a marine piper could swallow the tune in addition."

Our band is stationed at Quantico and every man we've talked to from here is quite proud of the fact that it is the first pipe band in the Marine Corps. But then, marines usually are first at about everything else, or haven't you heard?

It isn't the "noise" of a pipe that does things to the men, it's a "Big Wind" that blows no good.

Sometimes we, too, shudder, but only when we stop to think of stepping into civilian life, knowing that there are a few people "out there" with the same "sense of humor" as the dear author of "The Big Wind," and people that insist upon "reconditioning these boys." We don't know every U. S. Marine, but those we have met, know what they want when "the big show" is over. We assure you that these men will make ideal civilians, sans help of people with a distorted sense of humor. But right now, we believe that the Marine Pipe Band deserves a round of applause, a big hand—a hand like we got "over there"—a hand like that which we ran into in Washington on October 27. Not a slap in the face from the hand of "The Big Wind."

Germany's Home Guard

By Paul Winkler

Dwindling Manpower

THE GROUP OF FRENCH traitors at present operating in Germany seems to be devoting itself to two principal tasks: (1) propagandizing the 2,500,000 Frenchmen in Germany in a desperate effort to win them over to their ideas in order that they may influence the French elections after their return; and (2) persuading the French workers in Germany to enlist along with German nationals in the local Volkssturm formations—the home guard which Germany is now forming of the dregs of her manpower.

The second appears to be the more immediate task. It must, indeed, be an urgent one for Germany, if she is willing to accept at all the risk of putting foreigners in these armed units, where the possibilities of sabotage and betrayal will be great.

From the point of view of Petain, Laval and company the campaign to push Frenchmen into the Volkssturm is no doubt closely connected with that of influencing them to support the views of the Vichyites in postwar France. Any Frenchman who accepts service in a German military formation is going to have plenty of explaining to do after his return to France. His excuse would no doubt be that he had little choice about entering the Volkssturm. But even though that may be true, and even though that answer is accepted there will still be a great gulf between Frenchmen who fought in the resistance movement against Germany and Frenchmen who will have fought in Germany's forces against the Allies.

"Volunteers"

It is not yet evident to what extent French workers will be able to resist the pressure which is being brought upon them to "volunteer." The term is a hollow one, even for Germans. In spite of the theory that the body is composed only of volunteers, the pressure brought upon all Germans to enter it is so great that no one, young or old, dares stay out unless he is completely crippled.

It is clear that the claim of the Germans that the country is seeing a levee en masse destined to produce a large guerilla army as good as, or better than, the French FFI of Tito's Partisans, is quite unfounded. The men who are being recruited by Nazi high-pressure methods cannot be compared to the tough, enthusiastic volunteers who constituted the resistance forces of the occupied countries. The Volkssturm will give Germany more cannon fodder. It will not give her another fighting army.

One of the measures being taken to trek down resistance to volunteering is the creation of the class of Volksschaedlinge (public enemies) for all those who do not enter the Home Guard. In a country where arbitrary deprivations, arrest, imprisonment, torture or execution may strike anyone at any moment, to be set down as a public enemy constitutes a threat for the future whose very vagueness makes it more terrifying.

First Clash

How untrustworthy this army of forced volunteers is likely to prove has already been demonstrated near Loetzen, in East Prussia. Unable to stand up under the artillery fire of the Russian troops, the Volkssturm unit took to flight. A Reichswehr battalion immediately opened fire on the fleeing Volkssturm men to force them back into battle. But the men of the Home Guard, maddened by the cross-fire, attacked the German regulars instead.

The recruiting of the Volkssturm seems to have caused much public dismay, judging by the efforts of the press to answer the misgivings of its readers. One of the most frequent thoughts expressed is that, since this is described as the "last levee," it constitutes an admission that Germany's reserves are exhausted. And if that is true, it is asked, can the enrollment of the old, the physically weak, and the very young change Germany's fate in any way?

The press is also insisting that Volkssturm units are not to be sent to the front, but are only to be utilized at home. That falls rather flat on the ears of those who see rifles and antitank guns and who receive instructions on the making of homemade grenades. They deduce thereby that the authorities are expecting shortly that the home front and the fighting front may be one and the same thing. The Volkssturm may not be sent to the front, but that will be because the front will come to it.

It is safe to say that there is no danger that the Volkssturm will ever become a genuine enthusiastic guerilla army. That does not mean, however, that the Nazi threat of continuing the struggle with guerillas is an empty one. The plan to set up guerilla units does not envisage using the undependable Volkssturm for that purpose, but SS and SA men, who will go into hiding with the defeat and operate from secret bases as long as they can.

Human Need In Education Is Stressed

Education can be improved only by improving human relationships that have been neglected by educators for the past 20 years, Dr. L. Thomas Hopkins told 1500 teachers attending the joint educational conference at McKinley High School yesterday.

He said too much emphasis has bene put on subject matter and facilities, "the nonhuman aspects" of education.

"In many instances when we study problem children," he contended, "we study the wrong individual, it is really some adult that is at fault."

Dr. Hopkins said the failure to see the importance of humanness in teachers, the failure of administrators to allow teachers time to be human in the classroom, has developed pupils that do not know subject matter, pupils with little character. Too much emphasis has been put on adequate skills with too little emphasis on the carrying over of learning into behavior, in meeting the fundamental desires of high school children to learn how to make a living, get married and have a better home life and to develop friendships, according to Dr. Hopkins.

"There is a greater general public feeling that schools are inefficient today than there was 20 years ago," he asserted.

Dr. Hopkins' lecture was the first of four being presented for public school teachers in connection with education week. The program will be continued today at 10 a. m. in the main ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel. The conference is sponsored by 14 local teacher organizations.

Separate Meetings Hit

Dr. Rayford W. Logan of Howard University, speaker at institute exercises of divisions 10-13 of public schools, held at Armstrong High School auditorium, emphasized the futility of discussing improvement of human relations in separate meetings of white and Negro teachers.

A telegram sent by him to Superintendent Haycock, with the request that it be read at the meeting of divisions 1-9 at the Mayflower Hotel read:

"The sheer futility of talking to separate meetings of teachers on the subject of 'Improvement of Human Relations' should be apparent to a child of the first grade. I trust that this is the last year that this travesty and mockery will be repeated."

The speaker discussed the relations between nations, large and small, in years immediately to follow, suggesting improvement of relations by granting of independence to all colonial and dependent groups, and raising the average 20-cent daily wage of darker races by abolishment of cartels and increased prices for goods which they produce.

Fairlington Folk Request Aid in Obtaining Store

A resolution urging the Fairlington housing development management to cooperate with private concerns which might seek to establish a grocery store in north Fairlington was adopted by the Fairlington Civic Association at its November meeting this week.

Residents pointed out that the north portion of the community is not within walking distance of any existing store, although there are from 5000 to 6000 persons living there. Also discussed was the association's project to provide for the construction of playground swings in various blocks with voluntary contributions by residents.

Guest speaker at the meeting was H. Schuyler Foster of the State Department, formerly professor of political science at Ohio State University, who discussed "The American People and Their Foreign Policy" and the Dumbarton Oaks proposals.

Miss Edith Krenlich will take over the leadership of Troop No. 9, Girl Scouts of Prince Georges County, Inc. Miss Krenlich will succeed Mrs. Elen de Pazzi, who is leaving shortly to make her home in Brazil.

Leathernecks Told Of Trials Ahead in Birthday Message

America's "Leathernecks," fighting combination of soldier and sailor, yesterday observed the Marine Corps' 169th birthday, while their commandant, Lieut. Gen. A. A. Vandegrift broadcast birthday message warning that the toughest part of the Japanese war is yet to come.

Celebrations at the three Marine barracks here, manned largely by veterans of the earlier Pacific campaigns, were initiated by General Vandegrift's address to military and civilian personnel in Marine headquarters in Arlington Navy annex.

"In our battle-studded history, we have been put to many tests," the commandant's speech read. "Coming events shall put us to even greater ones.

No Soft Days Ahead

"Our days ahead will not be 'soft days.' The foe, despite crushing defeats on land and sea is determined that we shall not succeed in our avowed aim of inflicting total and complete defeat. He will fight to the next to the last grenade—and, with the last one, will rush forward shrieking his fanatic cry and seeking to take us with him into death.

"We have met such determination before. We overcame it. We conquered it in another foe at Chateau-Thierry, and we have done it against this one at Guadalcanal and a score of other immortal battlefields."

Reviewing the achievements of the past year, General Vandegrift, praising the men who spearheaded the drive across the Central Pacific, said:

Memories Are Honored

"We honor the memories of the men who have fallen in the advance. Long after the total victory for which they died is won, they will remain heroically alive in the hearts of their comrades and in the legends of the corps."

The commandant's birthday proclamation was read to Marines at the Southeast barracks by Col. Donald J. Kendall, commanding officer. Similar observances were held at the 23d st. and Constitution ave. post and at the Navy Yard barracks where Sergt. Maj. Chester O. Hanford, veteran of 36 years service, cut a birthday cake for Marine personnel.

More elaborate ceremony attended the cutting of the official birthday cake by General Vandegrift at a reception last night in the officers' mess at 8th and I sts. se. A buffet supper was served to Marine officers and their families. Movies and other entertainment were presented at the post theater on Constitution ave.

Camp Jejeune's Women's Marine Band was featured in a WINX broadcast of the USO Bulletin Board program.

Broadway Potpourri

New York, Nov. 10.—At the White House, a few days before election, Robert E. Sherwood and a friend were working in the Cabinet room. They decided that one of their problems could be solved only by the President. "You may see the President," said Grace Tully, the White House secretary, "but only for five minutes" . . .

ROBERT E. SHERWOOD

"We need about 20 minutes," Sherwood insisted . . . Miss Tully was adamant. "Only five minutes," she repeated . . . Another White House aide whispered some advice: "Take the five minutes. But first get a bag of peanuts. The President likes to munch peanuts." Sherwood went outside to buy peanuts, and when he was ushered into the President's office for the five-minute talk, Mr. Roosevelt pointed to the new, large bag Sherwood was carrying. "What's that, Bob?" he asked Sherwood told him they were peanuts. The President and he munched them—for 40 minutes.

Maurice Maeterlinck, now over 80, has just completed a movie script which soon will be offered to Hollywood. Maeterlinck will return to his home at Nice. He will not apply for American citizenship. "I was born a Belgian, and I will die a Belgian," he insists . . . Once, in France, he was assured that if he became a French citizen he would become a member of the French academy, that he would be one of France's 40 immortals. But he refused to change his citizenship. "If I had something to lose by changing my citizenship, I would do it," Maeterlinck explained. "But to change my citizenship just for gain—that I will never do."

In the middle of the Presidential campaign, Paul Porter promised Liberty magazine an article by Harry Truman. Porter ghosted the article, but Truman refused to put his name to it because of the controversy that week over an article of his which had appeared in Collier's . . . Porter called Senator Hatch of New Mexico. "If you like the article, will you put your name to it?" he asked. "It will be good publicity for our campaign." Hatch read the article, agreed with it, and his was the by-line used . . . Then he phoned Porter and reported: "Liberty just sent me a check for $200 for this article. I'd like to contribute it to the Democratic National Committee because, after all, you wrote it." . . . "You can't do that Senator Hatch," Porter told him, "because you would then be violating the Hatch Act."

John Mason Brown, now on the Navy inactive list, has refused the lucrative offers to return to his post as drama critic. Brown will become associate editor of the Saturday Review of Literature. . . . Eleanor Roosevelt will be the matron of honor at the wedding of Truda Pratt and Sgt. Joe Lash, just back from Guadalcanal. . . . Ellen Schwanneke, the original "Maedchen in Uniform," has just completed a book about America. She wrote it in English. It's in diary form, beginning with her arrival here in 1939 and reporting the experience of an actress who relinquished her career in Germany in order to live in a free country.

Brig. Gen. Ted Curtis, chief of staff of the U. S. Strategic Air Force in Europe, has a watch which was presented to him at a testimonial dinner some years ago. This watch was one of many articles stolen from Curtis' apartment in Washington. The thief was apprehended, and the watch was recovered in a Washington pawnshop. . . . "How could you dare pawn this watch?" General Curtis asked him. "It has my name on it. How could you take such a chance?" . . . "That didn't bother me," the thief confessed. "I just told the pawnbroker that you gave it to me on your deathbed."

All 52 nations have accepted the invitation to the International Business Conference in Rye this week. The President has written a message to the conference, a message in which he discusses private enterprise . . . Brooks Atkinson leaves Harkness Pavilion today, for a long rest. He now weighs 102 pounds. Atkinson still is undecided about returning to drama criticism . . . The Indiana Committee of Arts and Sciences for Roosevelt, which was so effective in the campaign, will not disband, but will continue as an independent political organization, supplying its glamor and talent for worth-while causes during the next few years.

Eddie Knopf of MGM, who once was married to Mary Ellis for a few days, tells this story of the time he visited Alexander Woollcott shortly before the latter's death. Woollcott greeted him: "Hello, Eddy. I'm glad you came. We were just talking about you." Woollcott then started to discuss other things . . . "Pardon me, Alex," Knopf interrupted, "but you said that you were talking about me just before I came in. What was it?" . . . Woollcott replied: "Oh, someone happened to say 'I wonder whatever became of Mary Ellis?'"

Realty Men Oppose Fairfax Regulation

Arlington-Fairfax Bureau, The Post, 1630 No. Buchanan St. Tel. CH. 3239.

Adoption of the proposed ordinance regulating real estate development in Fairfax County would create a hardship on property owners and hinder land development in the area, according to the Alexandria-Arlington-Fairfax Real Estate Board, which has appointed a special committee to confer with county officials on the ordinance.

The committee, composed of Col. Clyde Eastman, Fairfax, Ashton C. Jones, W. S. Hoge, jr., and William P. Parramore, Arlington, and Ward V. Boswell, Alexandria, will meet today to discuss the proposal, which would require property owners to make improvements such as curbs, streets, water and sewage connections, and would make the development of Fairfax County real estate comparable to regulations in effect in metropolitan areas.

A public hearing on the proposed ordinance will be held Wednesday at the meeting of the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors.

Prince Georges Seeks to End Fire Hazards

Campaign to remove fire hazards in public places in Prince Georges County has been inaugurated by the Prince Georges County Volunteer Firemen's Association, Ramon Grenados, president, announced yesterday.

The volunteer firemen plan to make regular inspections of business houses, particularly of dance halls, beer taverns and restaurants and then will urge the proprietors to correct fire hazards. If the local departments are unable to obtain cooperation from the proprietors, the complaint will be turned over to the Fire Inspection Committee of the county association for transmission to the Maryland State Insurance Commissioner for legal action.

Conditions in the county were discussed at length by a recent meeting of the advisory board of the county association, Granados said. One delegate reported that a restaurant in the county has only one exit, which is directly in front of a staircase from the basement in which the oil burner is located. The windows are not large enough to permit exit, the delegate reported.

Another delegate reported that grease was so thick on the flue over the kitchen range in another dine-and-dance establishment that it was staining the roof but the establishment has only one exit.

Oakes' Saying Still Mystery After a Year

Nassau, Bahamas, Nov. 10 (AP).—A year has passed since Alfred de Marigny was acquitted of the slaying of the millionaire, Sir Harry Oakes, yet the most intriguing murder mystery of the decade remains unsolved.

It was on November 11, 1943, that a Bahamas Supreme Court jury voted, 9 to 3, to free the debonair de Marigny, Sir Harry's son-in-law, after a trial which had all the elements of a first-class drama.

Since then there have been no arrests, and police have given no indication that they have picked up the trail, long since grown cold, of the killer who bludgeoned and burned the aged Sir Harry to death the night of July 7, 1943.

However, the Duke of Windsor, former King of England and now governor of the Bahamas, insisted in a recent interview that "the case is still open, and will be until police catch the man who did it."

Raymond C. Schindler, detective who aided in de Marigny's defense, recently declared that the slayer could be found, and offered to start an investigation himself, without charge.

Sent from Nassau at the recommendation of the trial jury, De Marigny is in Havana, Cuba. His faithful wife, Nancy, Sir Harry's eldest daughter, recently has been in the United States attempting to win her husband's admission into that country.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

ON ONE OF THE LAST days of the campaign, Vice President Wallace walked several miles through the streets of politically important Harlem with Negro Congressional Candidate Adam Clayton Powell, jr. Thousands of Negroes crowded the line of march, looked down from windows, cheered Wallace, who has fought their battles.

Wallace continued to walk through the black-lined streets for 50 city blocks. Remarked Powell: "This walk, Mr. Vice President, is picking up 50,000 votes for Roosevelt."

"If I thought that were true," countered Wallace, "I'd walk all the way to the Canadian border."

What Reward for Wallace?

After Wallace's speech in Madison Square Garden, where he stood alongside Senator Truman and urged Truman's election, Wallace got the following telegram from Roosevelt:

"If your prediction that I'll win by 100 electoral votes comes true, then I'll make my prediction of 60 million jobs come true, and don't forget that I'll have one important job for you."

This raises one question which intrigues a lot of people, including some very close to the White House—what reward will the President give to the Vice President, who was definitely squeezed out at Chicago on FDR's own command, but who came through without rancor and, in a 30,000-mile barnstorming trip, sometimes making 20 brief speeches a day, pulled votes for the man who didn't want him.

Wallace could have back his old job as Secretary of Agriculture in a minute, if he wanted it. But he has indicated to friends that he doesn't want it. Also, friends say he is not going to be satisfied with being Ambassador to China or with some other "Siberian" assignment.

The President, on the other hand, is profoundly grateful and wants to give Wallace real recognition. If Cordell Hull should resign as Secretary of State, Henry, now recognized as a first-hand specialist on China, Russia and Latin America, would have first call on the job.

NOTE—At Bethesda Naval Hospital, 73-year-old Secretary Hull's health is not considered good, though he's in no immediate danger. He had to take three months off from the State Department last year, six months off the year before. Hull has one great ambition, extremely dear to his heart—to finish the Dumbarton Oaks peace machinery. This is now virtually complete, after which Hull may step aside.

'New York Rebuilt'

PILOTS OF THE AIR Transport Command assigned to fly important Nazi prisoners from Europe to the USA report that the attitude of the prisoners varies from silent and resentful to openly glad and relieved. Invariably, American Army food is a constant source of astonishment—even to high Nazi officers.

One thing that usually happens as they fly over New York is a remark from the prisoners: "Remarkably good engineers you have in this country."

The pilots agree, remark that New York is a miracle city. Next word from the Germans is: "It is amazing how they could rebuild the city so quickly."

Almost without exception, ATC pilots say, the Nazis have swallowed the Goebbels line that New York and other American cities were long ago reduced to rubble by Nazi bombs. And almost without exception, they sit in disillusioned silence for the last lap of the trip—from New York to Washington.

Were Kicked Out, But Helped

WHEN YOU CALL the roll of those who helped reelect Roosevelt, you can't escape one outstanding conclusion: Men he kicked out or around contributed a lion's share to his victory.

The professional politicians, with the exception of Mayor Ed Kelly of Chicago, didn't help too much. Likable, energetic Bob Hannegan of Missouri was no great beacon tower. Actually the President himself, as usual, was his own best campaigner. He carried the chief load. But second to him, here is a roll call of the ex's and kick-arounds who really went down the line for the man who kicked them:

Leon Henderson—kicked out as OPA Administrator, but organized the Independent Roosevelt Committee, raised thousands of dollars.

Donald Nelson—Kicked out as War Production Board chairman, but made an effective radio speech, worked hard backstage for FDR.

Secretary of the Interior Ickes—Those close-up to the Cabinet know how many times FDR has given the cold shoulder to various Ickes projects; has sided with palace favorite Harry Hopkins in the bitter Hopkins-Ickes rivalry. Yet Ickes was the President's main Cabinet speechmaker, hurled pointed barbs which the White House couldn't but definitely wanted hurled.

Bob Nathan—Eased out of the War Production Board because General Somervell and the brass hats didn't like him. He worked with Henderson on the Independent Committee for Roosevelt, raised thousands of dollars.

Sidney Hillman—Fired from the Office of Production Management without warning by FDR. He registered more voters—and got them out on election day—than any other man in the U. S. A. A lot of people, including Hannegan, looked upon Hillman with mixed feelings, but without Hillman's stirring up of the vote, FDR might not have remained in the White House.

Vice President Wallace—Ousted for renomination, but went down the line as noted above.

What Roosevelt Owes Us

ONE OF THOSE WHO worked hard for Roosevelt behind the scenes remarked after it was all over:

"I've gone down the line in 1936, in 1940 and in 1944. This time I want to be paid off. And I want just one thing," he continued. "I want Roosevelt to begin now to build up some real men capable of taking over his mantle. He owes that to us by this time.

"Also, I want to see a strong Liberal - Democratic - Republican organization built up which can really take over the job of winning the peace. Roosevelt owes us that, too. That's the only pay I want, but I think I and a lot of others are entitled to it."

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

West Offered Recognition In Top Washington Post

The two men who have been offered seats on the Surplus Property Disposal Board—and apparently they'll accept them—are James Shepherd and Sam H. Husbands. Shepherd is a Los Angeles attorney and a Roosevelt supporter. For a long time the Administration has been trying to give a Westerner a top Washington job. The Administration would like to make another Westerner the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. Secretary Forrestal refused to take the men from that part of the country who have been proposed by the White House and the President has turned down his recommendations. That's why the job hasn't been filled. Husbands is a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and he is chief of Defense Plants Corporation, which constructed many war plants. The President yesterday told his press conference that appointments to the board had been held up because he hadn't been able to agree on the third member.

KLUTTZ

A State Department official—a Republican—complained because he had to walk up the stairs yesterday morning. The elevator operators were out greeting FDR . . . Representative Lea of California gave away American flags to school kids along the parade route to wave to FDR . . . Up to noon yesterday, the President had been congratulated personally on his fourth term victory by many people, Democrats and Republicans alike, but not Tom Dewey. This hasn't made the President feel any kindlier toward his most recent GOP opponent . . . One happy outcome of Tuesday's balloting undoubtedly will be the end of the Dies Committee. Another vocal member, Representative Busbey of Illinois, was knocked off, making four in all. The committee will be placed in more stable hands if it is recreated. And the committee investigating the FCC isn't likely to be continued by the new Congress.

Panama Canal employes who joined the throng to greet the President yesterday were called in and bawled out. However, most of the agencies released their employes for the historic occasion. Two exceptions were the Government Printing Office and the Pentagon. Pentagon employes faced an impossible transportation problem. That's why they were'nt excused . . . A Democratic Congressman suggests the Republicans will now vote unemployment compensation for Federal workers, including themselves, since a good many were voted out of jobs. It's highly likely thta the Administration will ask the Congress to reconsider unemployment compensation for Federal workers. The matter should have bene taken out of politics, since it was supported in the campaign by both Roosevelt and Dewey.

Late election returns show additional casualties on the House Civil Service Committee. Representative Tom Scanlon (D., Pa.), the sponsor of the Scanlon resolution that would set up a war labor board to fix salaries for white-collar workers in Government, apparently has been defeated. Yesterday he was far behind by more than 3000 votes, with soldier ballots yet to be cuonted. The United Federal Workers are solidly behind the Scanlon resolution and a few months ago Congress was presented with a bundle of petitions signed by thousands of employes urging its passage. The committee lost an extremely able member when a recount showed that Representative Richard Gale, (R., Minn.) had been defeated. Gale is a liebral Republican and he had plans for a thorough-going reorganization of Civil Service.

Other committee members who won't be around after January 1 are Representative Klein of New York, a staunch advocate of pay raises for employes; Representative Stanley of the same State, who pushed for hearings on the Scanlon resolution; Representative Carson of Ohio, and Representative Praeht of Pennsylvania. But their losses will be offset somewhat by the election from Connecticut of Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse, who is interested in women who make a career of Government, and several more who favor Civil Service . . . Panama Canal employes still haven't been given this year's efficiency ratings. The ratings should have been made in May . . . Someone wrote to the White House the other day demanding one of those 60 million "Government" jobs which the writer said the President promised in his Chicago speech . . . At the War Production Board, the resignation of Vice Chairman William Batt is again rumored. Batt, it's said, wanted to be appointed in charge of the disposal of surplus war properties to foreign countries. He isn't expected to get the job.

In its resolution pertaining to the Virginia Senator, the council asserted he had failed to execute the mandates expressed by voters of the State, failed "to support the Commander in Chief of the United States and his party in time of war," and had placed "personal motives and ambitions above the best interests of the citizens of Virginia by repeated hostile acts toward the President and failing to support the 1944 nominee of the Democratic Party for President of the United States."

The council pledged itself to efforts to "remove from the United States Congress in 1946 Senator Byrd," calling on affiliated unions to join "in this patriotic undertaking."

Va. Ballots Reach 388,824 Record

Eighth District Leads In Turnout With 56,784 Voters

Richmond, Va., Nov. 10 (AP).—Complete unofficial returns from Tuesday's election today gave Roosevelt 241,907 votes to 146,917 for Dewey, a Roosevelt plurality of 94,990.

The record total of 388,824 votes for the major party candidates was 44,000 above the total in 1940 and exceeded the predictions of all Virginia politicians by at least 10,000 votes.

Roosevelt's total was over 6000 above his 1940 total, while Dewey received 37,000 more than did Willkie four years ago. It was the largest Democratic vote in history for a candidate with major party opposition, and the largest Republican vote with the exception of the 164,000 cast for Hoover in 1928, when the State went Republican for the first time since Reconstruction.

The vote by congressional districts:

	Roosevelt.	Dewey.	Total.
First	21,444	10,138	31,582
Second	31,616	10,462	42,078
Third	32,120	12,455	46,575
Fourth	18,336	5,312	23,648
Fifth	22,911	13,861	36,772
Sixth	27,566	19,786	47,352
Seventh	23,091	21,685	44,776
Eighth	30,187	26,597	56,784
Ninth	34,604	26,588	61,192

The "Fighting Ninth" District failed for the first time in many years to cast the largest Republican vote. The Eighth District, which replaced the Ninth as the district with the largest Republican vote, also threatened the Ninth's position as Virginia's heaviest voting area. Arlington County, in the Eighth, has forged to the front as the county casting the largest vote, with a total of more than 15,000.

The vote for the nine Virginia Congressmen:

First—160 of 161 precincts, Bland (D.), 23,151; Johnson (R.), 5346.

Second—134 of 134 precincts, Daughton (D.), 21,300; Woodward (R.), 9278; Shafer (Ind.), 6283.

Third—No contest.

Fourth—No contest.

Fifth—219 of 236 precincts—Burch (D.), 22,531; Carwille (Ind.), 6030.

Sixth—187 of 187 precincts—Woodrum (D.), 30,844; Strickler (R.), 13,896; Wilkes (Soc.), 163.

Seventh—254 of 254 precincts—Robertson (D.), 25,364; Earman (R.), 16,771.

Eighth—209 of 217 precincts, Smith (D.), 30,083; Murray (In. D.), 10,953; Michael (In. R.), 8832; Robb (Soc.), 671.

Ninth—349 of 249 precincts, Flannagan (D.), 33,957; Lincoln (R.), 25,860.

Roosevelt Increases Maryland Lead on Absentee Votes

Baltimore, Nov. 10 (AP).—The Maryland absentee service vote went to President Roosevelt in Tuesday's general election on the basis of complete official returns from 18 of the State's 23 counties received here today.

The absentee vote is being counted in several other counties today, but it may be several days before the complete tabulation is ready. In Baltimore City, where there was an estimated 20,000 service votes to be counted, election officials said the count might not be completed for 10 days or two weeks.

Only Baltimore city and county and Garrett, Howard, Montgomery and Queen Anne's counties had failed to report the absentee ballots as of 11 a. m. today, and the Queen Anne's and Garrett totals were expected late today.

War Ballot Results

The soldier vote totals to date included:

Roosevelt, 5970; Governor Dewey, 4466, a majority of 1504 for the President.

United States Senator Millard E. Tydings, Democrat, received a huge service vote majority over his Republican opponent, Blanchard Randall, jr. The 18-county total gave Tydings 7787 votes to 2296 for Randall.

With Queen Anne County the only one missing from the Eastern Shore, the First Congressional District service vote added 513 ballots to the lead of former State Senator Dudley G. Roe. The absentee total for eight of the nine counties in the district gave Roe 1330 to 817 for State Senator Wilmer Fell Davis, the Republican nominee.

Unofficial complete civilian returns in Tuesday's balloting had given Roe a 424-vote lead, and added to the service lead, assures Roe the first congressional seat in the new Congress convening in January, since Queen Annes is Roe's home county and it gave him a large majority in the civilian count.

Tydings Carries All

Senator Tydings carried every one of the 18 counties reporting the service vote.

With three of the five counties in the Sixth Congressional District reporting the official service vote, the absentee total for Representative J. Glenn Beall was 1821 to 1315 for his Democratic opponent, Daniel F. McMullen, Cumberland attorney and publisher. The unofficial civilian count had given Beall 60,142 and McMullen 42,930. Service votes from Montgomery and Garrett Counties are being tabulated today.

Five counties in the Fifth Congressional District gave Representative Lansdale G. Sasscer, Democrat, 2588 service ballots and Pvt. C. Maurice Weidemeyer, his Republican opponent, 734. Service votes were not available yet from Howard County and a portion of Baltimore City that is included in the Fifth District. The unofficial civilian vote had given Sasscer 47,279 votes, and Weidemeyer 26,520.

Favor Court Plan

The official absentee service vote in 17 Maryland counties tabulated from Tuesday's general election indicated that the armed forces favored the constitutional amendment reorganizing the Court of Appeals.

The 17 counties showed 3653 votes for reorganization, and 724 against.

The unofficial count of civilian votes for 15 counties reporting and Baltimore City had given the proposal, better known as the Bond Plan, 86,364 votes for, and 41,817 against.

The Bond Plan amendment reduces the number of Court of Appeals judges from eight to five, and makes it possible for Baltimore City to have two jurists instead of one on the State's supreme bench.

It also permits the judges to handle only appeals duties, since they no longer must sit as Circuit Court judges, and permits the chief judge to assign Circuit Court judges to other judicial districts where there might be a heavy court docket.

Here is the complete official civilian total for 18 counties reporting the six amendments:

1. Redevelopment, for 23,820; against 24,556.
2. Church bequests, for repeal, 36,994; against 33,886.
3. Publications, for repeal, 27,209; against 22,793.
4. Court of Appeals reorganization, for 33,563; against 32,016.
5. State's attorneys salaries, for 27,076, against 25,114.
6. Assignment of judges, for 27,900; against 28,216.

New Officers Are Cautioned On Sincerity

Camp Lee, Va., Nov. 10—(AP)—"Your leadership must be actuated by sincerityaincerity in all dealings with your superiors, and a direct, simple honesty with you subordinates," Col. O. W. "Sincerity is especially important in an officer," he said. "The American soldier can sight a pose as far as he can see. BARNABY

By Crockett Johnson

Yes. You must have seen my Third Cousin Malachy, the family black sheep. We look a bit alike... He's handsome too, in a theatrical way...
But what's he up to? ... His presence bodes the neighborhood no good—
Is he a BAD Fairy, Mr. O'Malley? ...
Well, Malachy O'Malley is no Puritan, m'boy—
There he is—
Cousin!

Western Edges Wilson; Coolidge Triumphs

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

New York, Nov. 10.—It could be that Navy softened up Notre Dame for Army tomorrow. That five-touchdown going-over the Midshipmen gave the Irish last week in Baltimore was pretty brutal. Navy doesn't leave a team like it found it. Those big Middies have lost two decisions, but they've been handing out a physical beating to the opposition all year.

POVICH

One of the Notre Dame scouts was commenting on it today, and he said, "I don't know if our boys can bounce back from that Baltimore game. Navy hit us awful hard. I scouted Navy against Georgia Tech and Penn, and Navy left its mark on those teams too.

The record substantiates him pretty well. Georgia Tech beat Navy, you remember, but Tech didn't gather any momentum with that victory. Apparently the Techmen haven't recovered yet from that rough afternoon against the big Navy boys. The following week Tech barely licked the Preflight team, and in its next game the still-weary Tech team took a beating from Duke in an upset.

Until Navy came along to knock off Penn, 28 to 0, the Quakers were supposed to be one of the East's football powers. A week later Penn apparently was still feeling the effects of that contest with Navy. Michigan came along and found that Penn team little more than a push-over in rolling up a big score.

The one place where Notre Dame needed help most this week, in its defense, the Irish got a break. Frank Syzmanski, last year's regular center, rejoined the team after getting a medical discharge from the Navy and Coach Ed McKeever is duly grateful for that.

It was Notre Dame's weakness in the line that made the Irish secondary defense look so pitiful against Navy last week. Dancewisz, Turlep and Kelly were so busy trying to plug the gaps in the Irish line that the secondary was vulnerable against Navy's cut-back plays by Jenkins, Scott's fake reverses and Barron's end sweeps.

Syzmanski may take the pressure off those Notre Dame backs tomorrow. He was one of the good men in the Irish line last year and though he has played no football this season, he has been working out with the St. Mary's, Calif., Preflight team. Pat Filley, the Notre Dame guard and captain, had been playing almost a lone hand in the Irish line where he was flanked by green youngsters. With Syzmanski alongside of him, Filley will get a tremendous lift.

The fact is that though Army is the heavy favorite to win tomorrow, Army is the untested team before the battle. The only opponent of any strength the Cadets have met and licked is Duke and that 27-7 victory was not completely impressive.

It's agreed, though, that Army may very well be the counterpart of Navy this year, loaded with talent in depth. Like Navy, the Cadets are bigger than Notre Dame, and more experienced. Coach Earl Blaik doesn't have many fears about how his West Pointers will react to tomorrow's game. "Before the Duke game which was our first real test, I went around and took the boys' pulses," said Blaik. "The only high pulse was my own."

The tip-off on how Army is loaded with material may be seen in the disposition of Joe Stanowicz. When he came to West Point, he was a schoolboy flash as a fullback. But Army didn't need fullbacks, and last year Stanowicz was stand-out plebe tackle on the varsity. This year he's a big running guard and the key blocker in Army's reverses.

At Toots Shor's last night, where Harry Wismer was presented the Sporting News trophy as the year's outstanding sports broadcaster, his friend Jack Troy, Atlanta sports editor, was in the gathering.

Troy was in a group with Bob Hannegan, Democratic National Committee chairman, "I know most of these people," said Troy, "but who's that chap over there in the glasses," and he pointed across the room.

"He," said one of the fellows truthfully, "is Charley Dexter, sports editor of the Daily Worker."

"You mean the Communist sheet?" said Troy, startled.

"Yep," said his informant with a wink at Hannegan, "they've come into the open since the election."

Notre Dame Underdog By 14 Points

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

New York, Nov. 10. — Notre Dame, unscored on by Army in five years, has another appointment with the West Point cadets in Yankee Stadium tomorrow—but in the novel role of long shot.

In a game that was a sellout since midsummer, with 78,000 fortunate ticket holders awaiting the battle, the Fighting Irish come back to this citadel of Notre Dame's man-on-the-street alumni to find Army the favorite by 14 points.

Beaten by Navy last week, Notre Dame tomorrow collides with an unbeaten Army team that has been scoring an average of more than 60 points a week, and is rated No. 1 in the Nation.

Counterpart of Kelly

Spearheading Army's power in the role that is the counterpart of Notre Dame's Bob Kelly is Felix (Doc) Blanchard, West Point's plebe fullback, who has been unstoppable to date. The high expectancy of a Kelly-Blanchard duel is an added fillip to the always natural attraction of Notre Dame vs. Army.

Even Navy's immensely powerful line couldn't completely stop Kelly last week. He scored the two Notre Dame touchdowns through the middle of the Navy wall after the Irish passing attack had carried the team downfield.

Against Army's offensive game, which has not been notably distinguished for its passing attack, the Irish are banking on Kelly's ball carrying and pass receiving to turn in the upset Notre Damers yearn for. Frank Dancewicsz, Notre Dame's passing quarterback, who panicked the Navy at times last week, is expected to waste little time with a running game if it meets up with the advertised Army defensive power.

Coach Early Blaik tonight announced that Blanchard won't start the game for Army unless Army kicks off. He will move into the game early, though, to take his place with Glenn Davis, fleetest of Army backs, and Right Halfback Max Minor, former Texas sprint champion, with Doug Kenna or Capt. Tom Lombardo quarter-backing the team.

Battle of "T" Clubs

Subjected to a fearful pounding by Navy's single-wing concentrations last week, Notre Dame will be meeting up with another T-formation club in Army today, albeit more versatile than their own, to date.

Coach Ed McKeever of the Irish has been frantically trying to repair his team all week for this game, and believes he may have found new strength in the line at two spots. The return of Frank Syzmanski, last year's veteran center, has bolstered that position, and McKeever has switched George Sullivan, big end, back to tackle.

Sullivan's end job will be taken over by O'Connor, whose fancy pass catching against Navy won him the regular berth, and in the backfield McKeever has replaced George Turlep with Munzio Marino. The latter is another of the reserves who outshined some of the regulars against Navy.

In Blanchard, the Irish will be facing another guy such as big Bob Jenkins of Navy, whose furious line smashes tore up the Notre Dame forward wall last week. Blanchard, like Jenkins, runs both inside and outside, although from the T-formation.

Army Hot for Revenge

Army hasn't beaten Notre Dame since 1931, and, as we were saying, hasn't scored against the Irish in the last five seasons. Tomorrow it will be an Army team hot on the scent of revenge for past indignities against Notre Dame which is eager to repair the debacle of last week in Baltimore.

There was one more worry for Notre Dame today, however. Army announced that Dean Sensanbaugher, one of its transfers from Ohio State where he was the fastest man in the backfield, will see much duty against the Irish today, alternating with Blanchard in the work-horse job.

Western Threat Smashed

Wilson High beat off this threat by Western's Red Raiders in the second period of their interhigh clash yesterday at Central Stadium but Western not to be denied, winning in the fourth period, 14-13. Trailing, 7-13, near the end of the first half the Raiders tried desperately to score via the air lanes, with Buddy Hart tossing a 10-yard heave to Quarterback Bob Lichty into the end zone. But two Wilson players were there to knock it to the ground and temporarily protect the Tigers lead.

Richmond, Va. Gridders Meet Today

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 10 (AP). Football coaches at the University of Virginia in the final workout before tomorrow's game with the University of Richmond put the accent on the speed which has carried this year's Cavalier team to an offensive record that is ahead by a considerable margin that was made by the 1941 eleven captained by Bill Dudley.

In the six games the Cavaliers have plaed this fall they have an average gain from scrimmage of 332 yards and 15.3 first downs a game. Three seasons when Dudley was leading the team the Cavaliers gained an average of 299.2 yards or 11.5 first downs for each contest in nine games.

Two new halfbacks have been tried in the Virginians' lineup in preparation for the game at Richmond. They are Frank Nasor and Bill Pickett and Coach Frank Murray liked their work so much that he let them know they had a good chance to start in the game Saturday.

Joe McCary may be given a chance to direct the team against Richmond. He started the contest with West Virginia but has been giving away to Charlie Ellis and Allen Clay in more recent games.

The fourth man in the starting backfield may be one of the Cavaliers' explosive runners, either Dick Davis or Frank Goodman, both of whom have averaged better than 10 yards each time they have carried the ball.

In experimenting with the lines yesterday Ralph Heikkinen, who is tutoring the forwards, used both Bill Parrish, Richmond, and John Gianakos, Blackstone, as starting tackles. One of these men may be in the line tomorrow teamed with John Kirkland, who has been playing an outstanding game in the line all season.

With Martin Palmer, regular center, still on the bench because of the injury received in the VMI game, Jack Holz will again be started in the middle of the line and probably flanked by Bruce Wood at right guard and Jim Fahey at left.

Hank Walker, star end, will be on the left flank against the Spiders and in the right end spot will be either Ward Speer or Ray Brown.

Navy, Cornell Battle Today; Hamberg Out

Annapolis, Nov. 10 (AP).—With one of Navy's outstanding backs, Hal Hamberg, definitely out of the game against Cornell Saturday, Middie football coaches today predicted the fray would be a punting duel between Cornell's end, Paul Robeson, jr., and Navy's John Hansen.

Head Coach Comdr. Oscar E. Hagberg of Navy, said Hamberg's continued disability from a leg injury upset his plans for the game, and also announced that Leon Bramlett, Navy's starting left end, was out of the running. Charlie Guy will replace Bramlett in the starting line-up.

Bramlett is suffering from a pulled muscle in his back, which should be healed in a short while, Hagberg said.

Plebe Jim Carrington will start at leftguard for Navy, while Ed (Germino) Deramme, slated to play his first game since meeting Georgia Tech, will be available as a sub for Carrington.

Cornell's great end, Robeson, has been the fifth man in the Cornell backfield this season, Hagberg said.

One of his tricks—flourishing the ball under the nose of oncoming tacklers as he breaks away—is likely to bring on some fumbles when he runs up against Navy's power, the Tar coaches said.

Commander Hagberg announced this starting lineup:

Navy		Cornell
Guy	L.E.	Robeson
Whitmire	L.T.	Hilbush
Carrington	L.G.	Rubin
J.Martin	Center	Winchester
Chase	R.G.	Williams
Gilliam	R.T.	Lloyd
S.Martin	R.E.	Tully
Dudas	Q.B.	Snider
Jenkins	L.H.	Dabderian
Barron	R.H.	Scherr
Scott	F.B.	Ancarol

Miller Defeats Fishburne, 35 to 12

Waynesboro, Va., Nov. 10 (AP). Miller School of Charlottesville downed Fishburne Military School's grid team, 35-12, here today in a game marked by frequent pass interceptions.

Fishburne rallied in the last four minutes of play and almost staved off a Miller threat after Bosserman had nabbed a Fishburne pass and ran to the 6-inch line. After three tries at the goal the visitors managed to push the ball across the line on fourth try.

Spare Man, $4.80, Scores At Pimlico

By Walter Haight

Pimlico, Md., Nov. 10.—Cedar Farm's Spare Man, away from the winner's circle since the spring meeting here, came through with a game stretch drive today to win the Lady Maryland Purse, best offering on the Friday program. Operating over a muddy track, Spare Man was up in the concluding strides to win by a head margin over Hugh McL Fenwick's Happy Lark. A length behind the photo for first money came Mrs. R. H. Horkheimer's Army Belle to be third. Scratches reduced the field to six.

Spare Man was installed the favorite by the crowd of 7500 and returned a $4.80 mutuel. The 5-year-old son of Kantar was clocked in 1:13 3/5, creditable time. Rain last night and this morning left the racing strip in soggy condition.

Jockey Has Narrow Escape

Jockey Nick Jemas allowed Spare Man to settle into best stride, while Happy Lark was showing his usual high early speed. Quarter Moon was closest to the pace with Army Belle in third position. Approaching the stretch, Jemas brought Spare Man up on the outside. The Cedar Farm hope gained slightly, shied momentarily when Jockey Len Bowers, on Happy Lark, went to the whip in front of him. Then Jemas went to work and Spare Man made the grade in the final jumps.

Jockey Doug Dodson narrowly escaped serious injury in the parade to the post for the second race and then rode Mrs. S. M. Pistorio's Proud Pappy home in front of the 2-year-old field. Dodson's right foot came out of the stirrup and he was forced to slide off the horse, but he held to the reins and was dragged under Proud Pappy's legs. Dodson refused to allow the horse to get away and barely missed being trampled.

$12.60 Daily Double

The son of Pompey was off in the first flight, wore down Ecomodate, and then drew out easily in the final 70 yards, winning by two and a half lengths. Mrs. E. duPont Weir's Gobi Desert was second, four lengths ahead of Ecomodate. Proud Pappy paid $10, completed a $12.60 daily double, and was clocked in 1:16 2-5 for the 6 furlongs.

Jockey Jemas booted B. A. Murphy's Good Nite to a four-length victory in the seventh race, a test of a mile and a sixteenth which drew a dozen cheap ones. M. Gilbert's Grand Fortune was second, and J. W. Etheridge's Garand was third. The winner paid $10.80 and was clocked in 1:50 3-5. Apprentice Jockey Elmer Skjeie escaped injury in a spectacular spill near the first turn. Skjeie's mount, Lump Sum, was jammed against the inside rail and all but went down. The boy was thrown against the rail but was only shaken up.

Commodores, Marines Clash

Bainbridge, Md., Nov. 10 (AP).—A crowd of approximately 15,000 servicemen and a handful of civilians are expected to be on hand to see the undefeated and untied Bainbridge Naval Training Center football team shoot for its fourteenth consecutive victory at Tome Field tomorrow against the Cherry Point, N. C., Marines.

Clipper Smith, the old Villanova coach, will bring a Marine aggregation to Bainbridge which has dropped four tests this year to Jacksonville Naval, North Carolina Preflight, Georgia Preflight and North Carolina U.

The Bainbridge crew are prohibitive favorites to make it five straight losses for the Leathernecks.

With two first-string backs—Quarterback Hilliard Cheatham and Fullback Harvey Johnson—on the injured list, Bainbridge will start a backfield combination composed of Joe Michaels (Penn) at quarter, Jackie Field (Texas) and Dante Magnani (late of the Chicago Bears) at halves, and Dewey Proctor (Furman and Great Lakes) at full.

Raiders Overcome Big Tiger Margin For Fourth in Row

By Newton Bowers
Post Staff Writer

Western's Red Raiders, despite the fact that every break of the game was against them, continued as the hottest football team in the interhigh league yesterday as they overcame a 13-to-0 deficit to edge the Green Tigers of Wilson, 14 to 13, at Central Stadium.

To the crowd of 1,300, the contest produced thrills galore. The Red Raiders were repeatedly penalized 5 and 15 yards at a clip when within 10 yards of scoring, but survived it all to extend their loop winning streak to four.

Tigers Count Early

Wilson had scored both its touchdowns before 5 minutes had been executed in the game—and both on blocked punts. Wilson kicked off and then halted a short 15-yard mach on the Western 30. Raider Gene Gould attempted to punt, but it was blocked by "Mac" McLarney and recovered by End Sandmeyer on the 10.

On the following play, Bob Leonard reeled off 8 yards on an off-tackle smash and Bob Henry went over after that through center. Gene Taylor's attempt to run the conversion over failed.

Wilson kicked off again, and virtually the identical moves were made by the Green Tigers to gain their second score as were made during the first. The Tigers' Chaney Klose broke through to knock down another Gould punt and Mel Sandmeyer promptly scooped it up on the 22 and went all the way. Taylor's placement for the point was perfect.

Gould Scores Twice

The Raiders really got started midway in the second period when Buddy Hart started finding capable receivers for his passes. Hart connected with a long one to Jim Hamilton that carried from his own 14 to the Wilson 20. Hart again passed to Hamilton, to the 8 this time and, on the following play, Gene Gould took it over on an off-tackle play with seeming ease. Bob Guillot's kick split the uprights.

The Westerners' winning touchdown came shortly after the last quarter started, when Jack Castro broke loose for 43 yards around end to the 2 and Gene Gould went over through center. Guillot sent the game - winning conversion through the uprights.

Western has the distinction of having the youngest cheer leader in the city. She is 5-year-old Barbara Ann Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Smith, 3506 Reservoir rd. nw., who went through her stunts yesterday with the other cheer leaders like a veteran.

39-Yard Pass Proves Big Factor in Upsetting Anacostia

A fourth-period aerial attack under the direction of quarterback Ken Hazel enabled Coolidge to emerge with an upset victory over Anacostia's Indians, 13 to 8, on the losers' field yesterday. The Indians dominated the ground play most of the contest, but a fumble on their own 15-yard line in the first quarter became one of the game's deciding factors.

Midway the first quarter, Charlie Kiesgen, Colt punt artist, standing on his own 46, kicked into the Indian end zone, the ball being put in play on the 20. On an attempted sweep, Ronny Kent, Anacostia back, fumbled on the 15-yard line, where the ball was recovered by Kiesgen. Jack Doffert broke through the Indian line for 11 and 2 yards to the 2. Al Shaw bucked the center for the score and Rowzee's conversion was successful.

Indians Score Safety

Rowzee kicked off to the Anacostia 44-yard marker where Kent again fumbled, but recovered the ball on the 38. Following an incomplete pass and a 1-yard gain through the line, Don Dinkel punted to the Coolidge 5. Hazel failed to gain and Doffert picked up 5 yards but a bad center out of the end zone gave the Indians a safety and 2 points.

In the third period, the Indians, receiving the ball on their own 45, drove to the Coolidge 11. Dick Purdy was caught behind the line for a 6-yard loss but Kent gained 3 to the 14 where Duke Mathieson completed a pass to Purdy in the end zone. Mathieson's try for the extra point went wide.

Indians in Futile Attempt

With approximately five minutes to play in the final period, the Colts gained the ball on their own 3-yard stripe. Hazel threw an incomplete pass, but on the next play hurled to Stan King, on the Anacostia 23, who picked up an additional 11 yards to the 12-yard stripe. Shaw gained 2 on the ground and Hazel chucked to Buck Henry in the end zone for the final touchdown. Rowkee'se try was unsuccessful.

The Indians attempted a comeback through the air in the final minutes of the contest, but four incomplete passes and an interception by Dick Umstead, Colt center, stopped the march short of the goal line.

Harrisonburg Tied by Lane

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 10.—The Harrisonburg Blue Streaks which have not suffered defeat in three years, were held to a 12-12 tie by Lane High here today.

Lane eleven outclassed the valley team throughout the first half, scoring two touchdowns. The first was made on a 25-yard pass, Brooks to Adams, and the second on an end run by Carter.

Early in the third quarter Albrite took the ball across for the Streaks, and in the final period Woolfe heaved a pass to Horne for a touchdown.

In the closing minutes Lane Marched almost the length of the field and had the ball on Harrisonburg's 2-yard line when the whistle sounded.

Youthful Grid Star

Chicago, Nov. 10 (AP).—He's only 14 years old and weighs 110 pounds, but Bernard (Bud) O'Brien is one of the offensive mainstays of the Morgan Park Military Academy football team. He's the team's star passer and in three recent games tossed eight touchdown passes.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

You Never Can Tell How a Film Will Jell; Notes of the Theater

A MAJOR FASCINATION of the "moom pitcher" business is the startling contradictions it is able to break out from time to time.

Take the case of the Warner Brothers picturization of the Howard Lindsay-Russel Crouse stage hit, "Arsenic and Old Lace," for example.

PRISCILLA LANE

"Arsenic and Old Lace" was finished I don't know how many seasons ago, with Cary Grant and Priscilla costarred, and held on the shelf, pending the collapse of the stage version of the Kesselring comedy of charitable homicide on the part of two sweet old ladies. It never collapsed.

The delay in release of the film gave rise to all sorts of rumors, reports and innuendos to the effect that Director Frank Capra, for one of the few times in his professional life, had spawned a monumental bloomer. The thing just couldn't be any good, or it would have been out there on the Nation's screens months ago! And many variations and reiterations of the same.

So what happened?

What happened was that "Arsenic and Old Lace" finally found its way to the Earle and ran up a popular hit transcending even the most optimistic expectations of its sponsors.

To be sure, it outraged the peculiarly subtle implications of the stage original, but it nevedtheless wrote itself down as one of the great laughing hits of the year. And that isn't all.

Comes word now that this saga of elderberry wine and elderly demises has been voted the Boxoffice Blue Ribbon Award for the month by the National Screen Council.

That means that a discerning group of appraisers strung across across the country have deemed it the best picture of its month for family consumption.

I can't for the life of me remember how I voted, as a member of the Council, in this particular ballot. Maybe it was for "Arsenic and Old Lace." If it wasn't, then I might as well have thrown my card in the ashcan. I am positive that my crossmark was not in favor of any of the runneruppers.

They were "Kismet," not yet even previewed in the Capital; "arriage Is a Private Affair" and "The Merry Monahans."

Anyhow, as I was saying, there's never a dull moment in this game—well, hardly ever.

The Metropolitan, here of late, seems to be going in for revivals of some of the best of earlier seasons' releases. On the heels of the present recrudescence of "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," the attraction will be Samuel Golwyn's resuscitated picturization of Sidney Kingsley's "Dead End," starring Humphrey Bogart, supported by a cast that includes Joel McCrea, Sylvia Sidney, Clare Trevor and Wendy Barrie. Perhaps more important than any of that is the fact that this is the picture that gave birth to that fabulous group of young hoodlums known as the "Dead End Kids." There should be a considerable impetus to interest in the prospect of seeing these young hoodlums all together again, as they were in the beginning.

His Excellency, the Canadian Ambassador, has invitations out to a preview of documentary films produced by the National Film Board of Canada, to be run off in the Department of Interior Auditorium on Wednesday night, November 15, at 8:30 by the clock. The major feature of the screening will be "Global Air Routes,," a topic of some international concern, supplemented by such other timely shortreelers as "Wounded in Action," "Fortress Japan" and "some short animations," whatever they may turn out to be.

By Way of Comfort

Zone Manager John J. Fayette is chortling quietly to himself over the quality of the mid-winter film fare his company promises for the Warner screens in the Capitol.

The most immediate spurs to his sense of seeurity are "Rainbow Island," a Technicolor something or other following the current "Frenchman's Creek," at the Earle, with Dorothy Lamour and Eddie Bracken costarred, and the camera version of "The Doughgirls," with Ann Sheridan, Jack Carson, Alexis Smith, Jane Wyman, Eve Arden, Irene Manning and Charles Ruggles. You know those doughgirls!

In the wake of these imminent knockouts will be coming along "The Very Thought of You," starring Dennis Morgan, Eleanor Parker, Dane Clark and Faye Emerson; the Cornelia Otis Skinner-Emily Kimbrough best-seller, "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay," costarring Diana Lynn and Gail Russell; "Hollywood Canteen," and then a long succession of top-flight items, enlisting the services of Bette Davis, Joe E. Brown, Eddie Cantor, Joan Leslie, Barbara Stanwyck, Joyce Reynolds, Kitty Carlisle, Joan Crawford and too many other stars to be listed here and now—not to mention an imposing roster of "name" bands that will be employed here and there to add musical zest to the gelatin goings-on.

Barring blizzards, the outlook is buoyant on Thirtenth Street, F Street and in the neighborhoods.

Daphne Du Maurier, so we are told by Helen Hoerle, that not-so-recondite distaff stentor of the theater—or is it stentoress?—is at least a triple-threat in the world of printed or spoken entertainment. She not only wrote "Rebecca," coming soon to the stage of the National with Bramwell Fletcher and Diana Barrymore costarred, but dramatized it as well and then went ahead and designed the setting for the London production of her play. That, Miss Hoerle would have us believe, was modeled after the original great hall at Manterbilly, which becomes Manderley in Miss Du Maurier's story. The only point is that the set which will be seen at the National is an exact duplicate of the one the author contrived for the edification of London audiences. That should be good enough.

Shouting-and-Tumult-Die Note

Let's get on with it! Not that we aren't, but now is the time to punch with everything we've got—which is plenty. Eh, Mr. President?

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.

Hedda Hopper's Hollywood

Hollywood, Calif., Nov. 10.—Vera Ralston has got herself a new deal at Republic. Her next picture will be "The Healer." Starts in two weeks. Herbert Yates will be out to see the beginning of it . . . I asked Gary Cooper, actor, who was going to do the worryying for him when he's Gary Cooper, producer. He said, "Listen here. When I feel that I'm about to get ulcers and start worrying I'll just stop being a producer and go on acting" . . . Buffy Cobb, Irvin's daughter, is writing radio shows back east and also finishing up a new play . . . Lucille Ball won't sell her Chatsworth ranch, but she sure is going to change its name, which, when she was in love with Desi, was "Desulu." Now I suppose it will have to be "Desudon't" . . . Lou Smith joined Margaret Ettinger's house of publicity as a full partner. Here's wishing them both luck.

LUCILLE BALL

Still Doing It

Cobina Wright sure had a star studded party Saturday night. The hill, the wind, the rain and the storm stopped nobody. I could better tell you who wasn't there than who was. Her guests included Gary Coopers, Bob Hopes, Harold Lloyds, Randy Scotts, Dinah Shore, Ilona Massey, Jeanne Crain, Paulette Goddard, the Basil Rathbones, David Selznick's Joan Fontaine, Jennifer Jones, Eddie Robinson. In fact, it was what we'd call a gala in the old days . . . Tony Moreno told me the best story of the evening. A year ago he was motoring to Tia Juana to see a bull fight. He picked up a gentleman along the roadway who was thumbing a ride. Gentleman asked, "Could you get me to the airport?" Seems his car had broken down a couple of miles up the road, so he started walking. Tony took him. Time went on. Tony visited friends in Mexico City, walked into a bank there, and was greeted by his hitch-hiking friend, who said, "I've looked all over for you." And I'll be darned if Tony didn't sign a contract to make five pictures with him—three as actor and two as director. And Tony said to me, "That will teach you never to pass anybody by on the highway."

Girls Will Be Girls

The day after Tallulah Bankhead and Anne Baxter fought over their mutual lover Alexis in "The Royal Scandal" both girls showed up black and blue. Bankhead had a sore back and shoulder. The girls kept saying to each other "I hope I'm not hurting you" as they slugged it out. They couldn't have been more apologetic. But they just didn't know their own strength, so Otto Preminger sent for an osteopath, who treated them both . . . S. Z. Sakall, that plump character, sat looking at Alexis Smith between shots on "San Antonio." "I'm madly in love with this girl, and have been since she was a baby—and you can print it, too!" said he . . . When John Garfield, Eddie Hall, and some of their pals were playing baseball in a vacant yard there was a guy standing by, heckling them. Finally Garfield yelled out and said, "What do you know about baseball?" "Not much," said he. He just happened to be Jimmy Dykes, the manager of the White Sox.

Started Something

Seems the hepcat talk used in "Janie" by Writer Agnes Christine Johnston was a new type of language even to the bobby-soxers. Now they're all writing to studio like mad asking for the key to this new lingo. You'll hear more of it in the sequel to "Janie." . . . Ketti Frings is getting little writing done these days. Too busy attending to her two newly adopted. They're a handful. . . . Capt. Archie Twitchell, whose life was saved by penicillin after he'd had a frightful time getting it, visited John Hubbard backstage, and while there was seen by Producer Al Rosen, who asked if he'd read a scene from the play, "Good Night Ladies." He had, and now he's playing the Skeets Gallagher role in Seattle. Twitchell and Hubbard worked together in the studios here in '37 and learned to fly at the same time. . . . The Rickenbacker picture can't start until Fred MacMurray is finished with "Where Do We Go From Here?"

Here and There

Warner Baxter, without mustache, visited the Lloyd Nolan set of "Circumstantial Evidence." It's a busy place, with about 55 youngsters working on the picture. Their lessons alone are enough to drive them crazy. Trudy Marshall was also showing the set to a very handsome sailor, but this doesn't mean that her heart doesn't still belong to daddy. . . . Understand Capt. Jack Warner, jr., who's with General Bradley in Europe, is doing our Army and his family proud. . . . Dennis O'Keefe sure has the women of his family on his neck because he's changed his name from Flannagan to Doyle, and now to O'Keefe. And his aunts think Flannagan is a pretty darned good name. . . . Manley Cramm, a soldier over there, writes that he likes "Devotion" better than any Warner picture, but we may not see it here for a long time on account of "Livvy" de Havilland's fight with Warners. . . . Stu Gilmore has been upped from cutter, which he used to be for Preston Sturgess, to director on "The Virginian." He looked at the old one, which was done by De Mille, then went to confer with Cecil—and Cecil has promised to direct the first scene of the picture.

The Gentler Sex

Remembered Faces

TODAY I am remembering all the little half-column photographs shown each day in the newspapers above the words "Killed" or "Missing."

They are the likenesses of young men, boys mostly, whose faces are firm and smooth, whose eyes are eager, expectant, and full of unfulfilled plans. Most have overseas caps, set on jauntily; many are smiling and seem to be saying to the home folk, "Well, here is the way I look in my uniform."

Every time I have looked at those boyish countenances, read the chilling words below them, I have had a sense of unreality. Surely it couldn't be true, that these young lives had stopped, that these young faces would never grow any older. And again the whole war would become unbelievable, incredible, the seeming figment of a dream.

Then, there were the brief obituaries bringing up the panoramas of young lives. An only son, this one, a "Junior," carefully educated, surrounded by background and opportunity. He was to have been his parents' link with tomorrow. Another leaves a bride—all his happy homemaking plans are ended. Another had an infant son he will never see. This one will not return to the college career that was interrupted, that one will not be coming back to greet the gang at the office.

I AM WONDERING how soon the faces in these half-column photographs will grow dim in memory—as dim as are the faces of other youths in overseas caps who, today, the Nation pauses to recollect. Well, that is a part of the flow of life, and after all, we have the monuments to remind us of the men who died in the Argonne Wood and at Chateau Thierry. We may not have kept faith with them in spirit, but we do have the monuments, great gray shafts, towers, monoliths, rotundas, dotting the landscape of America.

This time we say that our monument to our men who are dying around the world will be peace—permanent peace, or at least the unremitting effort to bring it about. But we also know in our hearts that at times we will flag in building that memorial, that the pressure of living will crowd out our good intentions, our noble aims; that the faces in the half-column pictures will become too dim to challenge us to keep faith with them.

OUR BEST insurance against such forgetfulness will be to establish living memorials to carry on the principles for which these youths sacrificed their lives. We need endowed college courses, scholarships, organizations, foundations dedicated to the ending of war more than we need marble obelisks to recall its tragedy. We need study, research, writing, speaking, and above all, human thought directed to the attainment of a peaceful world more than we need piles of stone, which eventually do little more than reflect our civic pride.

So on this anniversary of Armistice Day of World War II, I am herewith serving notice on all postwar monument committees not to waste stationery sending me a letter appealing for a contribution for a Gothic tower or a stone shaft. If I have anything from 5 cents up to give, it must be to something that will help man to catch up in his thinking about peace with his scientific power to wage war. "Think or die" that is the ultimatum we face. Memorials to the young men whose faces are now so fresh in our memory must goad us to think so that other young men will not have to continue to die.

Town Talk—

Rare Russian: He Didn't Want an Invitation; Mrs. Allen Gives Candid Publicity Appraisal

By Carolyn Bell

NOW THAT the tumult and shouting around the Soviet Embassy has died down—and things have returned to normal on 16th st.—it's time to tell of the ONE man in Washington who didn't want to go to the Embassy party. While half the town was trying to wangle an invitation to the ornate orgy, this strange creature was afraid he might be invited.

It seems that our friend is a White Russian—and holds an official position with the United States Government. Everyone knows that the Reds have been making overtures to the Whites—and visa versa. That is only as it should be, according to this gentleman.

But when someone asked him if he were attending the party celebrating the Revolution he said, "What?—drink a toast to my own downfall!"

"I AM just enjoying the good publicity while it lasts," said wise and witty Mrs. Frank A. ("Honk") Allen, jr., when asked about her husband's latest exploits. Under a head "Honk's Cleanup" Time Magazine gave the Washington Brigadier General a plug for his quick work in cleaning up the mess in which some 500 Allied newsmen had found themselves in Paris.

The new SHAEF public relations director (who is well known here—and particularly to the cavalry troops once based at Fort Myer) even had the newspapermen eating regularly, said the article. "That's more than he did for the family," quipped silver headed Mrs. Allen.

MUCH TO the disgust of the sensational-minded there were no duels—not even a heated argument at Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean's election dinner. Coming out of the fog of a post-election headache aided and abetted by a bit of champagne) "Buzzy" Hewes, that ardent Republican, had to admit that the Democrats "treated us gently, I must say."

Even Mrs. Thurman Arnold thought the evening ". . . so restrained, really . . . the Republicans took the whole thing very nicely." Seems that Mrs. Arnold had been in Connecticut a short time before election—where they don't take their politics with a genteel manner, AT ALL!

All agreed it was one of the gayest dinners the owner of the Hope Diamond had given. The music was excellent, the food even better than usual (lobster and steak, my dear). Only the Senators were lacking.

WOULD IT shock you to know that the haughty Protocol Division of the State Department can mention such an item as "training pants," for babies? I was a bit aghast.

But it would seem that even State Department officials are not immune to parental difficulties. Chatting with Ray Muir, who left the White House several years ago for a State Department post, I found the answer to some knotty international problems—and verified a few State Department rumors.

But I never expected Papa Muir (who has a cunning 2-year-old daughter) to solve my shopping problems, too. When we settled the state of the world Ray added "Oh by the way, they have some baby pants in at Bests' if you are interested!"

CHEVY: Empires may topple, Republicans may lose heart but "Chevy" goes on forever. The mellow white-columned building that houses Washington's exclusive country club is virtually a world of its own. After all, what club but Chevy Chase would dare turn down for membership a Supreme Court Justice?

Seen there the other evening was Lucy Hight dancing with Frank Almirall. Lucy was in town for a few days.

Cassie Thompson, whose husband J. Lawn Thompson is overseas, was accompanied by her brother-in-law, Lieut. Charles Thompson and his pretty blonde wife Betty. Betty was done up in emerald green. They were joined by Andy Parker and his wife. Mrs. Parker concealed her blond hair beneath a black turban. Dr. and Mrs. Russell John Jansen twirled about the floor. In a merry group were "Shorty" Gardner and his wife Jane.

MacDonald-Kirby Vows Spoken at Bride's Home

Taking their friends by surprise, Mrs. Pauline Kindleberger Kirby and Col. John Quincy MacDonald, USA, retired, were married yesterday in a simply arranged ceremony held at 4 p. m. in the bride's apartment at the Broadmoor.

A handful of close friends only were present at the wedding and for the reception which followed. The Rev. John C. Ball officiated, and Karl Kindleberger gave his sister in marriage.

The bride, who was unattended, wore a three-piece suit of pale pink wool and a deeper pink-flowered hat. Walter Ross was best man for Colonel MacDonald.

After a wedding trip to Florida Colonel and Mrs. MacDonald will return to Washington and will later go to Canada. They will divide their time between New York, Washington and Florida.

Another daughter, Miss Margery Louise Kindleberger, also attended the ceremony.

France to Order 700 Locomotives

New York, Nov. 10 (AP).—Railroad equipment quarters heard today that American locomotive manufacturers may get permission from the War Production Board within a week to prepare for construction of 700 locomotives for France.

Cost of the locomotives is estimated at about 100 million dollars and will represent the initial phase of a program to put the French railway system in operation again after the war. Representatives of the War Department and WPB are expected to discuss the French requirements at a meeting next week in Washington.

It was emphasized that shipment is not to interfere with the war program and the locomotives are not to be used until after the war. In the meantime, letters of intent would be given.

U. S. Aides Will Confer In Detroit in Speedup

Detroit, Nov. 10 (AP).—In an effort to speed up truck and ammunition production representatives of the War Production Board and the War Manpower Commission will meet here next Tuesday with truck and machine tool manufacturers.

From Detroit the group will go to Chicago and Cleveland before returning to Washington.

A shortage of machine tools currently is reported to be holding down the heavy ammunition program while a shortage of axles is said to be limiting heavy truck output.
